Cut spending or lose £450m Heseltine tells councils

By Christopher Warman, Local Government Correspondent

Local authorities face a severe loss of grant if they fall to bring down their spending within Government targets, and

He announced hat budget returns showed a ptal current expenditure of alout £800m, 5.3 per cent, above the target level for English local authorities. Taking wag and price inflation into account the gross hudgeted excess is about

Calling on counds to submit revised budgets in order to comply with the fovernment's rargers. Mr Heselthe said that if they failed he would reduce the total of grantfer 1981-82 by about £450m.

Local authorities have been asked to submit revsed budgets by the end of Jul, and it is likely that more than 100, including many onservative controlled councils will still be sufficiently over the targets to be penalized.

Mr Heseltine he built in a little flexibility as an encouragement to make reductions.

The package, annoced in the Commons and at meeting with local gornment leaders, amounts at psent to no more than threats.

Mr Jack Smart, chanan of the Labour-controlled socia-tion of Metropolitan lubori-ties, said angrily at the meeting: "We are abst at the end of local governor as we have known it fd nany years. It is impossible it us to meet the targets Mr Heline wants. There will inevitly be substantial supplementa ate

If councils lost £44 in grant, it was the equival of an 8p rate througho be country. In the metrolian areas, it would mean and? areas, it would mean and it-tional bill of £35 for desic

There is the possibility has some authorities, such assoss which Labour won in the ag elections, will increase their budgets, which could force Mr Heseltine to take stronger within Government streets and legislation to curb excessive rate increases if they ignore the Government's wishes. Mr Illryd Harrington, deputy leader of the Greater London Council, said that London stood to lose 157m if savings were not found. The GLC refused to be threatened by Mr Heseltine. said will cost a supplementary rate of 60 to 8p in October, Mr Heseltine told local authority leaders at the joint consultative committee on local government finance that the indicated £800m excess was very substantial, but he realized that final spending was usually lower than initial budgets.

On the other hand, some authorities are indicating that further reductions are becom-ing more difficult; and some indeed are talking of substantial increases in the current year

"It would therefore be irresponsible for the Government to sit back in the expectation that the budgeted excess will disap-

Local government had made some progress in reducing spen-ding but further efforts were needed, he said. More than one third of the authorities had already budgeted within the Government's targets, and half either hit the targets or got near enough to gain partial protection from the loss of grant.

Warning on local discretion Giving a warning of legisladition which would reduce local freedom and discretion, Mr. Heseltine emphasized that the basic relationship between central and local government rested on the premise that the Gov-ernment had the right to lay down overall spending levels. If individual councils refused to comply, that relationship would be fundamentally changed.

The Government was therefore considering measures, including legislation, to bring home to local authorities and their electorates the conse-quences of high-spending policies. There was considerable scope for further savings in local government, notably in manpower and administration costs. Last year Mr Heseltine called for revised budgets for the first time, when authorities had budgeted £740m above that year's targets. The revised budgets showed an excess of £350m and Mr Heseltine withheld £200m. He said yesterday it appeared that local spending for last year would be £50m to £250m above the targets, and therefore he could not return any of the withheld grant. Mr Ian McCallum, chairman of the Association of District Councils, said the new financial threats could lead to a further deterioration of services.

Employers to be consulted on sick pay scheme

By Pat Healy, Social Services Correspondent

Mr Patrick Jenkin, Secretary of State for Social Services, yesterday confirmed that employers are to be consulted soon both on the method of compenstating them for taking over responsibility for sick pay from the state, and on the proposals to allow workers to pro-vide their own sick notes when their illness lasts less than a week. He told the Commons Select Committee on Social Services that employers objections to the original proposals to make them responsible for the first eight weeks of sick pay had been mainly over the manner of compensation proposed for their extra wage costs. That had been a matter of study and discussion, and he hoped to publish a consultation p employers soon.

The new proposals were considered by a Cabiner committee on Monday, and are now being reducated before the final version is published. Mr Jenkin indicated that the proposals, stances to their employers.

Pay dispute to halt ambulances

By a Staff Reporter

Ambulance men are to stage a series of 24-hour stoppages, but with emergency cover, after pay talks with National Health Service management broke down yesterday.

The national officers of the four unions representing the 17,000 ambulance men are to ask their executives to approve the action next week. Approval A date for the first stoppage will then be set. It will be the ambulance men's first national action since the winter of dis-content in 1978-79.

Mr Robert Jones, secretary of the union side; said that if the management suspended any members the unions would immediately review the position. The breakdown came after the management kept to the offer of a 7½ per cent increase over 15 months, which the unions' membership had already rejected. That offer is within the government's 6 per cent cash limit for NBS pay.

The management did, however, offer a joint review of terms and conditions of service "to determine how far they meet the needs of the ambu-lance men in the 1980s."...

Mr Jones said: "Our reaction is one of absolute and bitter disappointment that the management have not taken the agement have not taken the message that an offer of 6 per cent is not adequate."

To maintain the level of the last independent award, in 1979 an increase of £15.40 was needed, not the £5.94 on offer.

Ambulance men have been pressing for a big rise, and for recognizion as an emergency service, like the firemen and police. Mr Jones said that the management had recognized the ambulance service as part of the NHS emergency service. the NHS emergency service, but there had been no commitment on pay.

The action would involve the whole ambulance service in 24 hour stoppages, but with emergency services still pro-vided. The tactics would be decided on a day-ro-day basis.

Before the recess the oft repeated view in Treasury circles was that the recession had bottomed out, that an upswing was on the way and that there was light at the end of the tunnel.

To the more cynical of Opposition MPs, that was interpreted as meaning that the economy had reached rock bottom and could not possibly get any worse. To the Tories, however, those prophecies boosted morale and sounded as though the worst was over. But yesterday the Prime Ministerial version was that the recession was just about reaching bottom, or in other words we were still heading downwards.

GO-AHEAD FOR WATER PROJECT

Mr Michael Heseltine, Sccretary of State for the Environment, yesterday gave the go-ahead to a controversial scheme which will tap vast underground water sources in Shropshire. The Severn - Trent Water Authority will be able to draw supplies from sandstone "spon-ges" covering 300 square miles in the north of the county.

A public inquiry on the plan was held in 1979.

Mr Heseltine has decided that the scheme, which will cost £11m, is needed to supply water to six million people in the Midlands and south-west England. Water will be drawn from bore holes and piped into the River Severa and its tributaries, to be taken off later for industry, domestic users and agriculture.

Mr Roy Brommell, the

Severo-Trent's director of operations, said that the project was cheaper than any alternative and would be started as soon as possible.

BURMAH CLAIMS £1bn FROM BANK

The Burmah Oil Company yesterday began its £1,000m claim against the Bank of England in the High Court in London claiming that the Bank took advantage of it in the aftermath of the 1974 oil crisis. The company, which was bailed out by the Baok in return for its 20.1 per cent shareholding in British Petroleum, is seeking to recover the current value of those shares.

Ir claims the agreement, in January, 1975 to sell them was "unconscionable" hecause it conferred undeserved benefit Mr Leonard Hoffman, QC, for the company told Mr Justice Walton that the oil crisis and stock market collapse of 1974 led to cash-flow difficulties. Burman had been financially healthy, with assets of £892m and pre-tax profits of £49m in the previous year. The collapse of the oil tanker market, in which the codpany was particularly involved, was the most serious consequence of the crisis. It feared it might default on separate loan agreements of £54m and 625 million United States and Canadian dollars, and believed it was likely to run out of cash within two months. It sought help from the Government and the Bank of England, and in December, 1974, it pledged its BP shareholding then worth £179m, to the Bank in return for guarantees and loan facilities. But the help, as Burmah had feared, did not relieve its liquidity difficulty and a month later it sold its 77,817,507 shares to the Bank at £2,30 each.

At the time of the sale the shares were worth £2.56, and they were to rise spectacularly as the stock market recovered. But the Bank had refused to agree to give Burmah a share of any future profits. BP shares were now worth £15.44, nearly seven times the

Impatience grows in Italy at politicians' behaviour

Signor Arnaldo Forlani to-day completed his first round of consultations in an effort to form a new government after his rasignation a week ago in the wake of the Masonic scandal, scandal, No great atmosphere of optimism surrounds his talks with the party leaders, especially on the central issue of relations with the Socialists.

Signor Forlani is understood to be unwilling to form a government without them. But the Socialists so far have shown a lack of readiness to de-fine their terms for returning to a coalition. Indeed it is not clear whether they want to come back into government at all for the moment.

The Socialist national executive is due to meet tomorrow and will presumably give an indication of the party's attitude. In the meantime the Matonic scandal remains as a cloud over the process of finding a

What is now emerging as the politicians go about their lel-surely series of meetings, with their sensitivities sharpened more by the prospect of local government elections later this month than anything else, is a growing impatience with their behaviour from other branches of the state.

Already the Bank of Italy has made its voice heard about the fate of the lira in a suitably alarmed tone. Now it is the turn of the Fereign Ministry to seek to draw attention to the dam-

The arrangement made then, however, was seen only as an interim step while the problem of the budget was studied by the Commission in Brussels and in talks between governments.

The Luxembourg summit at the end of this mouth was supposed to have taken up recommendations by the Commission and from individual governments. Signor Colombo had expected to see the German Chancellor here on June 17 and 18, but that is another occasion which will be sacrificed because of Italy's political problems.

Stability in the Gulf, or any other part of the Arab world, depended on something being done to resolve the Arab-Israel dispute and Europe would continue to try to make a construc-tive contribution, Lord Carring-ton, the Foreign Secretary, said yesterday. He takes over as President of the Council of Ministers of the European Com-

The contents of a settlement must be negotiated by them, though the friends of both could perhaps help them to overcome some of the obstacles.

Addressing the Middle East Association, Lord Carrington said that if each side continued to insist that its demands alone were right and justified and must be met unconditionally by the other side, he feared there would be no progress. "We must find a way to break out of this vicious circle and begin to build the mutual confidence so essential if real

Under the constitution there must be a presidential election by November 26 and the Bangladesh National Party (BNP), founded by President Zia ur-Rahma'n now has to find an acceptable candidate.

If party members fail to agree and fail out over a candidate, the various opposition groups will question the party's fitness to run the country. The state funeral and burial of President Zia was watched by hundreds of thousands of people in Dacca. The coffin was conveyed through the streets in an army truck to an open place where prayers were said. There was a remarkable moment when the huge crowd fell silent and prayed.

The coffin was transformed to a gun carriage and taken for burial to the grounds of the new parliament, which is still being built.

Bangladesh is in a state of shock and there is no doubt that its people feel a deep sense of loss. There is still mystery surrounding the fate of Major General Abdul Manzur, the leader of the hopeless and brutal rebellion in Chittagong. There are reports that he fled into the Chittagong hills with his wife and three children. Newspapers today said he had been captured and that two of his accomplices were also caught, but there has been no official confirmation of this.

Nor was there confirmation Nor was there confirmation of a report that while in custody, General Manzur had been riddled with bullets by angry soldiers. Tonight there was no sign—dead or alive—of the man who placed Bangladesh's future in the balance.

by Sir Freddie Laker

Ip and down the country all people talk about is recession—that's the trouble. While we're talking our foreign competitors are out working and taking our business.

It needn't be so. In 1977, when Laker Airways first proved that comfort and low cost could be reconciled, Laker was 29th out of 29 airlines in passengers carried across the Atlantic.

By 1980 Laker was fifth out of 43. How? By spending, not cutting back; employing, not laying off. We invested in more wide-bodied jets, installed the most sophisticated computer technology, hired top pilots and cabin staff and developed the most comprehensive training techniques.

The result was a record 923,000 passengers carried. And fares at their most competitive ever.

THE SAVING FOR BRITISH BUSINESS IS STILL GREAT AND THE MESSAGE STILL CLEAR.
IF YOU THINK LIKE LAKER YOU'LL SPEND
TO SELL: IF YOU FLY LAKER
YOU'LL SPEND LESS AND SELL MORE.

Why? Because you can afford to send more salesmen, more engineers, more bankers, more buyers more often to your most important market. And they'll get to the same key airports in the same time, with the same comfort and service as the expensive airlines.

We have to get it right because we can't ask the taxpayer to subsidise our mistakes. We have to offer real savings because we can't afford to lose goodwill through gimmick fares and discount cabins. We have to offer the same level of in-flight entertainment for less otherwise you'd feel cheated. And we have to offer full meal service with wine, bar and duty-free shop at the lowest fare or else you'd say 'that's not like Laker.'

And you'd be right. We run a scheduled daily transatlantic service, not cheap charter flights.

It starts from Gatwick, which is close to London and served by frequent main line trains from Victoria. You can relax from the moment you get on the train to the moment you get off the plane.

SO WHY AREN'T MORE BUSINESSMEN TAKING LAKER TO AMERICA? ARE WE ALL MAKING SO MUCH PROFIT THAT VALUE FOR MONEY IS MEANINGLESS? DO PEOPLE STILL BELIEVE IT DOESN'T MATTER WHAT YOU PAY TO FLY BECAUSE IT'S ALL TAX DEDUCTIBLE?

No fare is tax deductible unless you're making a profit. Corporation tax takes 52% of that: are you going to blow the other 48% on spendthrift airfares?

A Laker Super Economy can save you hundreds over any other economy fare — and it's just as free and easy. You can book any time, fly any time, extend your stay if opportunity knocks, shorten it if head office can't do without you—or combine business with pleasure and take the family.

Since children under 12 fly half fare it will hardly add to the bill.

For the high-flying businessman who wants to get there and back quickly, even greater savings are possible with the Laker 8-day Walk-On.

And the Same Day Walk-On offers the ultimate in value if you book and fly the same day.

You pay the same low prices whether you fly from Gatwick, Manchester or Prestwick.

Note that all Laker seats are bookable in advance—and easily bookable through any travel agent.

Laker flies up to 65 times a week to America, with 22,425 seats each way. That's a lot of flights and a lot of seats.

I've taken off all I can. Now it's your turn.

PARLIAMENT June 2 1981

Pay rises and output must go hand in hand

The level of inflation would continue to fall and the recession had just about reached bottom. Mrs Margaret Thatcher, the Prime Minister, said in the House of Commons when she faced several questions about the high level of unemployment.

Mrs Thatcher pointed out that in the United Kingdom a higher proportion of the population were in work than in any other country in Europe, save Denmark.

The answer to memployment (she said) lies in people giving good value for either products or services—such good value that the British housewife will buy those products or services in preference to foreign goods. to foreign goods.

Mr Michael Foot, Leader of the Opposition (Ebbw Vale, Lab), asked: What are the Prime Minister's latest thoughts about the so-called upturn in the economy which she sometimes propheses?

How do the appalling unemployment figures published a few days ago, and the figures about continuing falls in production, accord with her prophecy? When is the upruru going to take place and when are the unemployment figures going to begin to fall? (Labour cheers.)

(Labour cheers.)
Mrs Thatcher (Barnet Finchley, C): Most of the recent forecasts agree with two things. First, that the level of inflation will continue to fall and, second, that the recession has just about reached bottom, (Labour interruptions.) I would have thought that Labour MPs would have thought that encouraging The forecasts do not wholly agree about when the expansion will come for the simple reason that when it comes depends on how far we take advantage of the opportunities that are available, how far wage increases go haud-in-hand with productivity locreases, and what proportion of orders we get on the home market and the export market.

Mr Foot: Would the Prime Minister be more specific in translating her statement about the turn-round which is about to When is that going to be translated into some effect on the unemployment figures? (Labour

Does she agree with the extra-ordinary statement made by the Secretary of State for Employ-ment to the People's March for Jobs when he tried to pretend that memployment was nothing to do with him and his Government? How does the Prime Mindster reconcile that with the fact that reconcile that with the fact that unemployment has been going up more severely in this country than in any other industrialized coun-try? (Labour cheers.) Mrs Thatcher : As Mr Foot makes such a point of comparing unem-ployment and lobs in this country with those in Europe, may I point out that in this country a higher proportion of the population are in jobs, in work, than in any other coun-

Mr Peter Hordern (Horsham and Crawley, C): If during the past five years the unions had not demanded and employers had not conceded increases in manufacturing earnings which have doubled in that period while production has declined, there would be many more people in work today.

If the policies of the Conscition eventually.

Mos Thatcher: I agree. In this country pay over the past five years has doubled whereas output has slightly fallen. That is totally different for many of our competitors where pay has gone up in line with productivity. Consequently they have the jobs.

Mr Eric Varley, chief opposition spokesman on employment: During what period in the life of this Parliament will unemployment fall to the level she inherited?

Mrs Thatcher: The future course

mrs Thatcher: The future course of unemployment will depend upon the advantage which is taken of the opportunities available.

An important matter is the level of pay in relation to the level of output. He has tried to run away from the reality that the decline in industrial production was so sharp.

Dr Shirley Summerskill (Halifax, Lab): When she last visited Hallfax it was during the general election campaign to try to persuade people to vote Conservative. Will she pay another visit to Halifax and explain why it is that under her Government's policy member of the whole manufacturing base of the town is being gradually eroded?

Mrs Thatcher: One of the

Mrs Thatcher: One of the reasons, I have been trying to explain to the House is that in the past five years we have paid ourselves more for doing the same amount of work, and if prices go up the orders go elsewhere

Mrs Thatcher: Anxious as I am to reduce the level particularly of youth unemployment, that would be an extremely expensive way because of the amount of social security benefit which would have to be paid to those whose jobs are released, especially if it were to go down to 60 for men and 55 for women.

The Secretary of State is trying to move towards a scheme under goods.

Mir Robert MacLennan (Caithness and Sutherland, SDP): In at least four answers the Prime Minister has referred to the level of incomes. Does so believe that her hectoring on this subject is any substitute for a properly worked out incomes policy?
Miss Thatcher: It has been incomes policy which has led to people demanding more pay regardless of extra productivity.

During earlier questions to Mr James Prior, Secretary of State for Employment, Mr Eric Varley, chief Opposition spokesman on employment, sought an assurance that in the forthcoming full-scale Cabinet debate on economic policy Mr Prior should demand, as the minister principally responsible, immediate measures not only to arrest but to reverse the rise in unemployment and the waste of human resources.

Mr Varley (Chesterfield, Lab) declared: The only way we are going to get out of this position now is to make sure that governments can influence the level of employment and output. Public, spending and public works must be at the heart of it.

Mr Prior (Lowestoft, C) replied: There are many factors which

Mr Prior (Lowestoft, C) replied:
There are many factors which important of these is the level of world trade, and there is little that the Government can do about

As for consultations with my colleagues, I am certain that he will find that the Cabinet is in full agreement about its policy.

He said that at May 14 me provisional number of people registered as unemployed in the United Kingdosh was 2,558,405—an. Mr David Winnick (Walsall, North, Lab): The month by month increase in registered unemployed and the devastation caused to lands, could well mean that the total number of registered jobless could rise to three million in the very near future. The entitusiastic response given to those who marched from Liver-pool to Lozdon in protest against-unemployment shows only too clearly that the British people will at the first opportunity reject a Government that has brought back.

ment and all the misery and humiliation associated with such large scale joblessness.

Mr Prior: Certainly pay has an humiliation associated with such important part in trying to keep our costs down and our competitive position better. The last two position better from the last going further to accept the promuch as this Government. going further to accept the pro-phecy of Mr Winnick.

Usemployment did not start in 1979. If there had been some simple answer to the problem of unemployment, presumably the Labour Government would have found it. We face problems which the rest of the world is facing. the rest of the world is facing, and the only problem is that over the last 20 years we have failed to face it. Mr Gwüym Roberts (Cannock, Lab) : In view of her oil resources, Britain is in a different position to other industrialized countries. Every analysis shows that the 1,300,000 that this Government has added to the dole queue is mainly the result of its policies. Unless the Government soon decides to devote much of the financial resources from oil to respect the industry not only will we have unemployment of 3,000,000 but 3,500,000 in the near future.

We have to export more goods. We have to prevent, by better production ourselves, the import of more manufactured goods. All these things show how uncompetitive we have become over the last 20 years, and the need to tighten up considerably in industry, if we are to compete. He must recognize that all these problems have been coming to Britain for a long period of time. The position has been getting worse over the last 20 years. That is one of the reasons why our recession is deeper than that of a number of other countries. Mr Peter Bottomley (Greenwich, Woolwich, West, C): If we are going to get back to increased employment it would be more sensible if those on the back and front Labour benches agreed to lower the general rate of payincreases.

Bottomley: Role of pay

Mr Gordon Bagler (Sunderland, South, Lab): Is he serious when he says that oil does not affect the situation? If we could use the resources of the Government to ensure that British industry—the foundry less and many other

Mr John Stokes (Halesowen and Stourbridge, C): Unemployment will only fall if British industry and commerce provide the goods and services which British people and services which British people. want to buy. Sadly, at the moment they often prefer foreign. moment they often preier foreign.

Mr Prior: All too often British people prefer to buy other people's goods rather than goods they have produced themselves, and why they should expect other people to wish to buy goods that

Citizenship of children born abroad

NATIONALITY BILL

It was the Government's intention where it gave the right of abode here, Mr Timothy Raison, Minister of State at the Home Office, said in moving a new clause at the start of the report stage of the British Nationality Bill. Mr Raison (Aylesbury, C) said the Government believed that the curcovernment seneved that the current arrangements for the transmission of citizenship as a result of consular registration were not satisfactory. They operated only if the father was a citizen by descent and did not extend to cases where only the mother was such a citizen.

A significant extension of the descent arrangements was con-tained in the proposal that women as well as men should be able to pass on British citizenship to children born to them in the first generation overseas. This enor-mously increased the chances of a child born overseas having a

The Bill also proposed a generous system of registration of children whose parents were in various forms of overseas employment at the time of their birth. This applied to birth in Commonwalth as well as in fooring

Mr Michael Mates (Petersfield, C)

Mr Michael Mates (Petersfield, C) said there was one group of people who would be unfairly treated if the Bill as at present drafted was not changed. They were the people born overseas of British subjects, citizens of the United Kingdom and colonies with right of abode here, who up until this Bill became law could transmit their British citizenship, whomsoever they married.

When this Bill became law they would cease to be British subjects and would become British citizens by descent and not full British

If it did not it should be put right. The case for those on Crown service was irrefutable.

Where the Home Secretary considered it justified, changes could be made to the way in which particular types of case should be considered. Individual cases could be treated exceptionally where there were exceptional factors. The number of refusals had come on average to just under 10 per cent a year in the last five years. This did not indicate a very practical need for a right of appeal. In many of the refusals such a right would be wholly uncalled for Budgets of local authorities in England for this year, 1981-82, indicate a volume of current expenditure about £800m or 5.3 per cent above the Government's target level at Novamber, 1980, prices. Local authorities have also made provision for higher pay and price increases than allowed for in cash limits, and have thus budgeted for a cash excess of £1,250m above the amount assumed for current expenditure in the Rase support gram settlement.

This is an inadequate response to the Government's request for lower public expenditure and protects the current consumption and staffing levels of local government at the expense of reterayers whose ability to pay is already seriously disminshed by the present recession.

One man, Mr Rupert Murdoch, owned The Sun, the News of the World, The Times, and The Sunday Times as well as papers in America and Australia. On April 27 the latest available date, the circulation of The Sun, was 3,845,575 copies. That meant an estimated readerable of about 10,000,000. A story appearing in its columns could do untold damage. His Right of Reply in the Media Bill aimed to give the public a limited sufeguerd. A typical case of the distortion practised by several national newspapers was the front page head-lines: "Cancer patients sent home to die" which were published durant to the service of discountry of the service of t ing the winter of discontent in 1978-79. It would be difficult to Imagine a report more damaging to the hospital, the union concerned or the whole Labour and trade union movement. Teamed with modern education, science has led us to believe we have matured beyond the need of God - we may now safely throw away the crutch of religion. These modern advances will provide all needs and banish all evils.

But what is the TRUTH?

Modern science has failed utterly to reveal the purpose of human life or explain its incredible potential! With modern education it remains in ignorance of the TRUE VALUES! It does not know the way to PEACE-whether world peace between nations or peace in the home and family unit. It has failed miserably to deliver the world from illiteracy, poverty, famine, disease, fears and worries, frustrations, unhappiness! After all, the principal contribution of science and technology to civilisation has been the development of constantly more terrifying weapons of mass destruction! This has brought us to today's No. 1 problem - HUMAN SURVIVAL!

Science and technology are not evil in themselves. but an important facet in a good civilisation-if we had one. It is the materialistic CONCEPT—the approach to life and its functions and problems from the materialistic "GET" attitude instead of the spiritual "GIVE" attitude of outflowing "LOVE."

For that reason modern science is a false messiah! destroy the mankind that produced it!

Before that happens, that great "Unseen hand from some place" will intervene in world affairs and save humanity from itself! World PEACE is closer than you think. But it will have to come as something done TO mankind-not done BY self-seeking humanity! The world will have to be set on GOD'S track-not a maudlin.

emotional or superstitious religion - but a TRUTH and way of life that MAKES SENSE and will CAUSE peace.

Not even a Shotgun should stop Shergar

By Michael Phillips Racing Correspondent

Shergar is a confident selection to win the 202nd running of the Derby Stakes (3.35) at Epsom this afternoon. Unoriginal as my choice may be it is difficult to escape from the conclusion that Shergar has an outstanding chance of giving Prince Karim, the present Aga Khan, his trainer Michael Stoute and their jockey Walter Swinburn their first taste of success in this classic. Shergar's case looks watertight

Shergar's case looks watertight.

Some have wondered whether his jockey, who is trying to become the youngest to win the race since Lester Piggott was blooded at the age of 18 in 1954, has sufficient experience to cope with the occasion. Yet I have every confidence in Swinburn and so, I know, do the Aga Khan and his trainer. More often than not it is the horse who wins the Derby, not the jockey, and Shergar has already done enough this season to suggest that Swinburn only has to point him in the right direction this afternoon to collect the spoils.

Following the same victorious path taken by Henbit en route to Epsom last year. Shergar has already achieved emphatic results at Sandown and Chester this spring. Each time he looked more and more like a potential Derby winner. What he proved on both occasions was that he has the speed to first rake a good position; the speed to first rake a good position; the speed to hold it and, finally that rare blend of speed and stamina to capitalize on that advantage.

That is of crucial importance at Epsom because it means that Swinburn will be able to have Shergar in the first six soon after the start and thus avoid the usual scrimmaging and jostling that always seems to go on behind year after year. While conceding that Shergar has won his races very easily this season some critics were still maintaining at least until last Sunday, that those he has treated with such contempt have not amounted to much.

Then, on Sunday, they were forced to swallow that particular criticism when Kirfling paid Shergar a timely tribute by winning the Gran Premio d'Italia in Milan. For it was none other than Kirtling who Shergar left toiling, 10 lengths adrift in his wake, at Sandown Park at the end of April. In Milan Kirtling beat the colts who had finished second, third and fourth, respectively, to Gliat of Gold in the Italian Derby. A training preparation which has gone as smooth as silk, the ability to go well on any ground, seemingly oblivious to the conditions underfoot and good times are other points in Shergar's favour. He has done everything that his trainer has required of him at home this year and never ceased to impress our Newmarket correspondent. While not breaking any records on the racecourse this season—he did crack one at Newbury last September—Shergar has recorded consistently good times, i.e., fast times in comparison with the other races run at the same meeting on the day in question.

Cocaine and Recitation were the three to drop out yesterday—with a comparison out yesterday—with a comparator to drop out yesterday—w on the day in question.

Invariably that is the hallmark of a fine athlete. And in appearance Shergar looks handy and adaptable. He proved his adaptability at Chester when he came round those tight bends as if he were bolted down to a high speed running rail.

Finally he sports a pedigree which so often goes hand in glove with success on these occasions. I know of no other runner in today's field of 19—Centurius.

field to have already won over the Derby course.

While on the subject of the course, Philip Mitchell, whose stables are alongside it, told me yesterday that they had almost threequarters of an inch of rain earlier in the morning. "But from the Derby start to the top of the hill, approximately six furlongs from home it will still be almost perfect ground on the day, provided that there is no more rain, because it drains so well," Mitchell commented. He had just position than most to judge.

A fascinating aspect of today's classic is the fact that Swinburn and Shergar have been alongside Piggott and Shotgun at the start. This then is the fresh faced young starlet alongside a man old enough to be his father, a man who has won the Derby eight times already. The memory of Piggott winning on Roberto and the Minstrel will never fade. His was a superhuman effort on both those occasions. His victories on Never Say Die, Crepello, St Paddy, Sir Ivor, Nijinsky and Empery, all came easier.

Even if today's race develops into a war of attrition from the start, a real battle between the stayers as opposed oattle between the stayers as opposed teo the supposedly faster horses, I doubt whether Shotgun has the speed, let alone the class, to give his supporters in Yorkshire something to

Al Nasr and Lydian, the two French challengers, have both been drawn high, therefore towards the outside. That ought to enable their Gallic-riders to avoid the sort of trouble that they have tended to get themselves into in days gone by.

Desmond Stoneham, our French correspondent, told me yesterday that Al Nasr, who is unbeaten, is the better. But by all accounts his nerves are suspect and after a bad flight from Paris he could easily be on edge during the long parade. Lydian, on the other hand, has a placid temperament and could has a placid temperament and could, in his opinion, be placed Riberetto, who may well try to lead from start to finish, as he did when he won the Darby Trial at Linguid Park, Krug and Sheer Grit, are others who seem likely on breeding at any rate, to last things out until the binter end. As for Robellino, if, as I suspected after York, there is a chink in his armour he could easily be found out now on the grounds of lack of staming. Guy Harwood's stable has carried all before it this season and Harwood has said all along that his principal hope of winning this year's Derby lay with Soft ground was blamed for his defeat—his only one so far—at York. However he was a bit above himself throughout the preliminaries and that will never do at Epsom where there are so many more things to distract him.

I will be extremely surprised if SHERGAR, b c, by Great Nephew-Sharmeen (Val de Loir). Worthy short-priced favourite to give Michael Stouts and his new jockey. Walter Swinburn, their first Derby success. Outstanding on form, Is sure to handle the track and possesses unlimited stamina. Can give the Aga Khan's family their first Derby victory since Charlie Smirke rode Tulyar to win in 1952.

SHOTGUN, gr c by Warpath-

Nevert and Dante won a wartime substitute at Newmarket in 1945.

WAVERLEY HALL, br. c, by Great Nephew, Haunting Melody (Sing Sing). Shares distinction with Shergar of being sired by Great Nephew, but otherwise looks good bet to finish last.

Summary: To paraphrase the immortal words of the eighteenth-century gambler, Dennis O'Kelly, the part owner of Eclipse, it must be "Shergar first and the rest nowhere". Those looking for each-way alternatives could do worse than consider Robellino or Shotgun.

Equal No 1 ranking for Miss Leadbetter

By Richard Streeton

Sally Leadbetter's rapid progress and consistency in the badminton season just ended have brought her equal first place with Gillian Jilks in the English rankings list. Miss Leadbetter, aged 19 from Guernsey, moved to Essex last year to concentrate full time on the game and was ranked equal fifth in the 1980 list.

Mrs Jilks, who played only doubles at the All-England championships last March, remains an outstanding singles player by English standards. She retains her national ranking on merit, having won the English title for the fourth successive year last December and the eighth time in all.

Now, though, Mrs Jilks has a rival in the English game for the first time since her rivalry in the early 1970s with Margaret Beck, later Mrs Lockwood. Mrs Jilks beat Miss Leadbetter three times last season and lost to her twice, but played few singles matches abroad for the rankings committee to consider.

Miss Leadbetter gained several significant international successes during the winter, including wins against Lene Coppen (Denmark) Saori Kondo (Japan) and Tatti Sumirah (Indonesia). Otherwise, the women's rankings are predictable with Helen Truke, a Southampton schoolgirl, aged 16, ranked No 5 on her first appearance in the lists.

Ray Stevens and Kevin Jolly continue to head the men's rankings which include the promising Gary Asquith, aged 20, for the first time. The selectors decided against issuing rankings for doubles this year because of the lack of sufficient tournaments in which regular pairings took part.

The International Radmintons Federation, at their recent annual meeting in Japan, elected Craig Reedie of Scotland as president in

The International Badmintons Federation, at their recent annual meeting in Japan, elected Craig Reedie of Scotland as president in succession to Stellan Mohlin (Sweden). They also decided against banning the controversial reverse spin service and made the draw for the final stages of the 1982 Thomas Cup. England, who as hosts, qualify automatically for the closing stages, start their programme next May against the Australian zone winners, who are likely to be Malaysta.

The winners of that match meet Indonesia in the semi-final stage: they meet either the European zone champions, almost certainly Denmark, or the Pan-American zone champions, probably Japan. The opening two-day matches have been arranged for May 10 and 11 and May 12 and 13 followed by the semi-final matches at Birmingham and Preston on May 14 and 15 and May 15 and 17. Hipwood puts Les Diables out of reach

By John Watson
With an inch of rain at Smith's Windsor, following night's storm, the gravel-based turf played slow and readily punchable yesterday for the last two quarter-finals of the six-chuk-ker Queen's Cup. These condit-ions were more inhibiting for the longer-hitting players who, in the first match, were Robert Graham and Julian Hipwood for Les Diables Bleus, and Alphouso Pieres and John Horswell for the Sladmore, who started one goal

Sladmore, who started one goal up on handicap.

It was level-pegging until the third chukker when Les Diables began to move substantially ahead. But in the last, Pieres scored once, and John Horswell twice for Sladmore to narrow the margin of Les Diables victory to 10—9. Fipwood, who plays off a nine-goal handicap (Britain's top) put in six of the winner's goals, three of these being penalty shots.

Julian Hipwood's brother, Howard, pivot man of Galen Weston's Maple Leafs, proved the brightest star on the field when play transferred from the No 2 ground to the faster No 4 for their contest against the Cirencester team, Los Locos, From the cester team. Piggott poised to pounce for at least a double

By. Michael Phillips No matter how he fares in the No matter how he fares in the Derby Lester Piggott should not fall to leave his mark on Epsom today. Twelve months ago he delighted his followers by winning two of the six races on the programme. He may well do so again today on Crimson Court (4.20) and Rabdan (5.25).
Piggott was also hoping to win the Diomed Stakes on Belmont Bay but the Colt, who recently won the Tote Lockinge Stakes, was withdrawn somewhat un-won the Tote Lockings Stakes, was withdrawn somewhat unexpectedly. In his absence the day's second most valuable prize could now go to Shasavaan, who carries the Aga Khan's colours and is trained and ridden for him by Messrs Stoute and Swinburn.

Shasavaan was a bitter disappointment to his connexions
earlier this season in the Tote Free Handicap, for which he started favourite and finished last. Later, though, he redeemed him-self by winning nicely at York where he coped well with the toft conditions underfoot.

Motavato, an opponent this fternoon, took full advantage of hat lapse at Newmarket and won that lapse at Newmarket and won the Free Handicap. That perform-ance raised hopes that he might win the 2,000 Guiness, but he ran badly in that classic. It transpired that his glands were enlarged when he returned home and that could easily explain such an inept performance.

Apart from Shergar winning The Derby, the one sight that I would relish this afternoon is that of Easter Sun winning the Daily Mirror Haudicap. Easter Sun is trained by Michael Jarvis who was entertaining, with some justification, such high hopes of winting the Derby while the wet weather persisted with Beldale Flutter, the only horse to have beaten Shergar. only horse to have beaten Shergar, until his colt's accident at New-market seven days ago.

With Easter Sun Jarvis at least has a good chance of picking up some sort of consolation prize at a time when the rest of his horses are running conspicuously well. It must be said that Easter Sun, who won his first and only race this season so vincely at Newmarket on 2,000 Grineas day, will still need all the luck going because he has nothing in hand of either Fine Sun or One Fleet Street, judged on their races together at Newmarket and Sandown last, year.

On a line through One Fleet

On a line through One Fleet Street he has nothing in hand of the City and Suburban winner, Lafontaine, either. Mirror Boy will carry the hopes of the Daily Mirror's punters club in this the race that their newspaper sponsors. Well that he should go Easter Sun is still just preferred. Trainer and jockey fined: Alan Aylert, the Isle of Wight trainer, was fined £150 and John Williams, was fined f150 and John Williams, the jockey, £100 at a Jockey Club inquiry in London today. The disciplinary committee found Aylett to be in breach of Rule 151 (part 3) when he ran Taras in the Rutington Handicap Hurdle at Fontwell Park on May bank holiday. Monday. Williams was judged to have been in breach of part 2.

The rule governs the trainer and The rule governs the trainer and jockey's attempt to give their horse every chance of winning the race. Taras, the 7-2 tavourite, was not seen with a chance until two flights from home, when he improved rapidly. He finished extremely fast but failed by a length and a half to catch Morton The Hatter.

Oliver Gray, the lockey, who was fined £400 by the local stewards for "excessive and unnecessary use of the winp" when winning on the two-year-old Golden Wilkle at Ripon on May 20, had the fine reduced to £200 after an appeal to the Jockey Club's disciplinary committee in London today.

Something old, something new

From Rex Bellamy Tennis Correspondent

Tennis Correspondent
Paris, June 2
Chris Lloyd, aged 26, and Hena Mandilkova, 19, have again been thrown together in the semi-final round of the women's singles at the French championships. When that happened last year, Mrs Lloyd conceded a tough first set but then firmly took command. It was the same story when they clashed again in the final of the United States championships, Miss Mandeikova was the last player to beat Mrs Lloyd in tournament competition at Atlanta last September, tion at Atlanta last September, but has lost their five other matches.

Mrs Lloyd's status here is the equivalent of Bjorn Borg's. At the age of 18 she seemed likely to beat age of 18 she seemed likely to beat Margaret Court in straight sets in the 1973 final, but eventually had to yield. No one else has beaten Mrs Lloyd in Paris—and this is her sixth appearance. Even more remarkable is the fact that since August, 1973, she has lost only one singles on a clay court: to Tracy Austin in the 1979 Italian championships. But her two clay court matches with Miss Mandi-kova both went to a third set and the disparity in age suggests that the disparity in age suggests that Mrs Lloyd should become in-creasingly vulnerable.

Mrs Lloyd certainly appreciates the hazards. She said today that Miss Mandlikova was "dangerous —a streaky player like Evonne Cawley. She goes for broke, takes risks. On her day she can beat anyone." is so little between them that today's superficially clear-cut match lasted two hours and six minutes.

In the first set Miss Ruzici was serving for a 5—2 lead and had three break points for 5—3. Any contest between them has two other attractive features: In their dress and deportment they embody all that is best in womens' tennis, and in their basic playing methods there is a sharp contrast between Mrs Lloyd's baseline game and Miss Mandlikova's talents for the service and volley.

That said, it must be added that although these slow clay courts produce the best men's tennis of the year, they tend to show the women's game at its least spectacular. This should be born in mind next weekend when the singles' final will be shown on BBC Television: a welcome extension of their coverage of these games.

In the first set Miss Ruzici was serving for a 5-2 lead and had three break points for 5-3. She could not have worked harder. Miss Rinaldi, aged 14, has had a memorable first trip to Parls. She reached the last eight and resiliently fought her way backinto today's match after a fierce early assault from the free-hitting Miss Mandlikova. The American though, was often tricked when Miss Mandlikova played short. Among Miss Rinaldi's engaging characteristics, is her neglect of the insincere convention of making application of making application of making manufactures after the insincere convention of making apologetic gestures after He's very tough on clay. It's his best surface. He hits a lot of balls back. I really had to fight." Borg, incidentally, came up with something new—3 lobbed service return that won him the point. He had noted that Taroczy was charging to the net fast and was going all the way. Borg may play like a machine but there is a brain behind it.

Back injury puts Trevino's future in doubt

By Mitchell Platts By Mirchell Platts

Lee Trevino has been forced to withdraw from the £60,000 Lawrence Batley International, which begins at Bingley St. Ives, Bradford, tomorrow. He has suffered a recurrence of a back problem which has plagued him for several years and was taken into the Park Plaza Hospital in Houston on Monday after he awoke with severe muscle spasms and unable to move.

It is understood that a thorough

It is understood that a thorough examination is being carried out by the same surgeon who operated by the same surgeon who operated on Trevito for a hernlated disc in November, 1976. A spokesman for the Lawrence Batley International said: "Arnold Selinas, Trevino's manager, telephoned the news and he expressed a concern over Lee's immediate future."

Trevino, a former Open and United States Open champion, has not played in the last two tournaments on the United States circuit because of the recurrence of his back injury. It appears he aggravated his back through the necessity of twice having to play 36 holes in one day because of "rain-outs" in previous events. Lon Hinkle, who won the World Series of Golf in 1979, has stepped in at the 11th hour to replace Trevino and he joined Frank "Fazzy" Zoeller, a former United States Masters champion, as the American challengers in the professional field of 132.

Gerald Ford, former President of the United States, will com-pete in the Bob Hope golf fournament at Moor Park from September 24 to 27.

It was a balanced match, never more than one hole in it either way, and all square for much of the time until Courts, in worsening conditions and a cutting east wind, pitched to 10 feet at the 14th for a birdie and the lead. He lost that lead by pitching too strong to the 18th and leaving himself a putt of 100 feet down the slope. Inevitably, he left it short, for the Valley of Sin was only a few yards beyond the stick, and took two more, but on the 20th green the position was reversed. Were leaving position was reversed, Way leaving himself too much to do with a himself too much to do with a loose approach.

By this stage it is improbable that the selectors were much concerned with the result, for the match was interesting enough to confirm the good impression each player has already made. The result is unlikely to have damaged Way's chances, but it gives Coutts the chance to increase his reputation against Roger Chapman today.

The match was abandoned well before the intended starting time, and the Australians were back to London to prepare for the first of the Prudential one-day matches, so far as they could. The game at Lord's should start on time provided that there is no more newy rain.

The Australians have had as miserable luck with the weather in the first few weeks of their tour as any Australian side can have done since 1902. And this was despite arriving about a month later than usual, and depriving several counties of their traditional marches. Well, man proposes fielded a team their to be some way short of their Test side, provided the injured and recalcitrain return—were the batting of Wood and Chappell, both now clearly in form. Their uneasiness must be that their bowlers looked rather feeble in the brief chance they had to show themselves.

I have proper sympathy for the Australiens, but I think Gloucester shire also deserve a meed of mercy. When the weather suggested it might be improving, and Gloucestershire had played well in difficult circumsances they were much cheered up.

Then there came the "Flash! Bang! Bang!" if I may quote the immortal lines of the Australian poet Adam Lindsay Gordon: and once more, no cricket. Gloucestershire have not Gordon: and once more, no cricket. Gloucestershire have not cricket. Gloucestershire have not bowled nor received a ball in the county championship this year, and we are in June.

Rugby Union -

Life and soul of the party at scrum half quickly acquired, remain impor-tant assets. I retain a vivid memory of his strength and promise when North-west Counties won a famous victory over the All Blacks at Workington in 1972. Within a counter of seasons he had

Rosario, June 2
In years to come, no doubt, one of rugby's quiz questions will be: "Which player won a British Lions blazer without playing any any rugby for them?" The answer to that one, of course, is Stephen James Smith, of Sale and England, who flew out to South Africa in time for the last international of the 1980 series, only national of the 1980 series, only to at on the replacements' beach.

"The coach told me", Smith confides, "that if things went confides, "that it things went really well they might be able to fiddle me out on to the pitch for the last few minutes, But I wasn't having any of that. A lad knows when he's got a chance of making the Guinness Book of Records."

This probate graphics soul. the Guinness Book of Records."

This urbane, gregarious soul, whose unfailing good cheer and good sense have contributed so much to the morale of the party out here, now looks back on an international career which began in 1973 (thus making him the longest-serving England cap still playing) and which might yet bring dim the honour of echipsing Dick Jeepe's record of 24 caps at scrum half. England's team for the second international next weekend will be announced on Thursday will be appearing in it for the twentieth time. Smith knows that if he can hold the England scrum half position against Australia and throughout the championship next season, Rothmans Rugby Year-book, our vade-mecum, will be needing to make an adjustment in the records.

That may depend on the sort of are England see themselves playing. If they feel they must put an increasing emphasis on back play, Nigel Melville's speed in service and on the break could be seen as vital ingredients. When Melville gets his chance at top level, Smith, who has the highest regard for his young rival's potential, is generous enough to concede that England should have a scrum half to serve them with distinction for many seasons. Melville's attitude on this tour is exemplary in another fashion. He is soaking up the atmosphere, listening to his elders, and grateful to be sitting on the replacements' bench on big occasions.

Meanwhile, Smith's strength and game England see themselves play-Meanwhile, Smith's strength and nous at close quarters, as well as the experience which cannot be

Within a couple of seasons he had played six times for England, but in the next five, when, with a natural joie de vivre, he had put or too much weight and on occasions looked to be needing occasions looked to be needing the game to be played at his own pace, he acquired only four more caps. But it was a honed-down Smith who was part of a magnificent morthern success against the All Blacks at Otley in 1979. He was then brought back to the England side for what he calls his third international career. A grand slam soon followed, Smith operating with much shrewdness operating with much shrewdness behind a mighty pack, and he has been a fixture ever since. been a fixing ever since.

The touring party enjoyed yesterday what all regard as the best off-the-field experience so far. They trained and then had a barbectned lunch at an estancia of 10,000 acres (a modestly sized one in this country), handsomely equipped with a polo pitch and an unending supply of horses strong and willing enough even to convey front row forwards vey front row forwards

Kiernan leads destruction of guest team

Gold Cup XV 10 Irish XV 51 Oudtshoorn, South Africa, June 2.— The right wing, Mike Kiernan, romped across for three tries as Ireland destroyed a Gold Cup Invitation XV here today. Their tour record now stands at three wins and three defeats going into the final game, the second interthe final game, the second inter-national against South Africa in Durban on Saturday.

The British Lion, John Robble, playing at scrum half and filling in as captain in place of Fergus Stattery ground fron tries and a in as captain in place of Fergus Slattery, scored two tries and a dropped goal. The other Irish tryscorers were the centres, John Hewitt and David Irwin, flanker John O'Driscoll and lock Jerry Holland. The full back, Michael Cuinn, flown in from Ireland to replace the injured O'llie Camp. replace the injured Ollie Camp-bell, kicked two penalties and three conversions.

The invitation side scored a try through their centre, Jimmy Freysen, and the stand-off, Christo Spangenberg, kicked two penelties. Two Irish players, Paul Dean and Bremdan Foley, left the field injured but are not regarded as doubtful for Saturday's inter-

Residential Property by Baron Phillips

Why first-time buyers should join the hunt

Activity in the British property market traditionally reaches its peak for the year this month.

Spring usually brings with it thoughts of a move and families and young couples begin the time-consuming process of house hunting. For the next few weeks we will witness the results of this spring time hunt.

This year there may also be something of a revival of the housing market which over the past 18 months has been somewhat sluggish. House prices as a result have moved little, barely keeping pace with inflation, and in some areas have not even done that.

House agents, building societies and builders believe that during the rest of 1981 prices will match inflation and if you are thinking of buying this may well be the time to do so. For the time being mort-gage money from building societies is in reasonable supply but the Building Association's outgoing chairman, Mr Leo-nard Williams, has warned of a pending shortage.

For young couples and single people this must be the time to seriously consider their firsttime purchase. Over the past five years building societies have increasingly shifted their emphasis towards the first-time purchaser and more than half their cash goes to this sector of Established bome owners considering trading up or moving to a new area, must consider very carefully the expense of such a decision. Estate agents' fees, valuation and surveying fees, advertising costs, stamp duty and removal expenses have all escalated considerably and it now probably costs in the region of £3,000 to move up-market or to a different area.

And that of course excludes the wear and tear on you. When you are moving into your second, third or even fourth home, you become part of the house buying chain where house buying chain where every link can be extremely tenuous. Until fairly recently it has been a house buyers' market and vendors should be extremely cautious about tak-ing their home off the market.

Someone in this office discovered they were simply being used as a second string to a prospective purchaser's bow and when it came to exchange of contract, before which they had unwisely taken their house off the market, the purchaser time purchasers who find stalled for time until he bad themselves in the position to

This historic early English Manor house, which has been continuously occupied since 1075, set in 46 acres in Branscombe, continuously occupied since 10/3, set in 46 acres in branscounce, south Devon, is being offered for sale by Jackson & Jackson. The house has been carefully restored and modernized during the past decade and the agents are expecting offers in the region of £170,000 to £175,000.

first choice. But more and more agents are reporting a great deal more inquiries from purchasers and clearly the situation is easing for the vendors. If, however, you are considering buying a brand new home then builders are offering various gimmicks to tempt you, most of which will ease the cost of the One of the most startling is that offered by Barratt Homes, which undertakes to buy your old home and sell it for you if you purchase one of their houses. This scheme even applies to the company's top-ofthe market developments like Papillons in Blackheath, SE London, where prices for four bedroom houses are around £100,000 to £110,000.

Another interesting development in the past two years has been the increasing activity of banks in the house funding arena. All the major clearing banks will offer mortgage advances and one of the smaller banks is offering 95 per cent mortgages on their valuation of the property. Interest rates are usually higher, in this case 13.5 per cent, but after tax relief the increase is fairly marginal on advances under £25,000. Banks also have no generally imposed upper limits and their minimum advance has reduced dramati-cally to around £5,000.

These developments may be of particular interest to first-exchanged on the house of his support a mortgage but may not have accumulated sufficient reserves to provide a full 10 per cent deposit.

Flats and houses for firsttime purchasers abound these days and not only around the country's major conurbations. An excellent example of some of the new homes in country and provincial settings coming on to the market is the new Ravenscourt Park, an attractive village style scheme on the outskirts of Lymington.

The development is being undertaken by Glenthope Lim-ited and is being handled by Jackson & Jackson's Lymington office.

Located about one mile from the town's high street the development consists of 39 three-bedroom detached, semidetached and linked houses. Unlike many schemes, that are priced sensibly between £28,950 to £32,500, great attention has been paid to landscaping and the creation of a "village" type atmosphere. Work on the site has been completed now and the houses are ready for immediate occupation. The agents tell me 12 have already been sold and keen interest is being shown in the development. Mr David Coates of Jackson & Jackson, says that a whole cross-section the market is showing interest in Ravenscourt Park which he hopes will take the 'village community" of the development even farther. Around the country Barratt's have gone out of their way to provide a selection of homes that can be afforded by the first-time buyer. And on a number of the sites single bedroom units are available for under £15,000 which, together with various incentive schemes the company operate, makes these homes ideal purchases for the young first-time buyer.

In stark contrast to homes at the economy end of the market come a selection of country estates which in their own way also offer tremendous value for the purchaser. Ogscastle is one such estate set in the uplands of Lanarkshire covering more than 100 acres.

The centrepiece to the estate is a fine example of a Scottish Georgian villa which has been built on the site of a seventeenthcentury castle. The present day house was built in 1817 by Mr Michael Linning, sponsor of the ill-fated and unfinished Scottish National Monument on Calton Hill in Edinburgh.

Accommodation consists of four reception rooms, five bedrooms and a self-contained flat. In the grounds there is a stable block which is thought to pre-date the house, and contains a mews dwelling. In addition the lodge is offered with vacant possession. Agents Knight Frank and Rutley are seeking offers of £160,000 for the whole but say they are red to sell the property in three lots.

Through the same agents a 4,500 acre sporting and agricultural estate in Perthshire; Kinnell Estate, is also being offered for sale at an asking price of more than £750,000. The farming element of the estate extends to about 1,550 acres covering some arable and grazing land. useful Kinnell House dates back to the end of the sixteenth century and was the ancestral seat of the Chiefs of Clan Macnab. Over the years the house has been modernized and now has three reception rooms, up to seven bedrooms and four bath-TOOMS.

But it is probably the sporting element of the estate which will really attract a purchaser. The grouse moor extends to more than 4,000 acres and also provides some good stalking. In addition the estate owns salmon fishing rights in Loch Tay, together with trout fishing on the river Dochart and several hill lochs.

The sale is being conducted by KFR in conjunction with Renton Finlayson of Aberfeldy.

Canada's passing show reflected with wit and charm

Toronto is now the third busiest city in the English-speaking theatrical world. Even the Trudeaus graced its first International Theatre Festival. Or did they? Ned Chaillet explains. . .

Everything about the effusive introduction rang true. A surprise appearance by the Candian Prime Minister, Pierre Trudeau, seemed perfectly in order at Toronto's first International Theatre Festival, the largest such event in North America. The head table, crowded with such figures as the america of Ontario and the premier of Ontario and international theatre people, including the British impresario Ian Albery and New York's Joseph Papp, took it at face value and rose to applaud his entrance. But they were faced value and rose to applaud his entrance. But they were faced with an imposter.

Beyond a doubt, the sensation of the festival was a woman named Linda Griffiths, pulling back her long hair and donning a suit and slight French accent to become Pierre Trudeau. Her performance in the play she had written with Paul Thompson, Maggie and Pierre, had just enough of scandal about it to throw a trace of alarm into the reception she was given at the luncheon for distinguished guests. In the play, she had portrayed not only Mr Trudeau hut also his estranged wife Margaret and a reporter investigating their courtship, marriage and marital collapse, making most of her quick changes to music by the Rolling Stones.

She confined herself to gentle and informed satire at the luncheon, but the success of her impersonations at the Theatre Passe Muarille was partly beyond the personalities she enacted. Her commentary on the Trudeaus reflected many of the changes in Canada during the Prime Minister's rise, fall on the Trudeaus reflected many of the changes in Canada during the Prime Minister's rise, fall and rise again, and best of all she reflected those changes with wit and a high measure of personal charm, although a more decisive vocal separation between characters would improve it.

first of the festival's shows to receive offers from abroad, including one from Edinburgh, but it was far from the last Despite the high-powered presence of foreign companies, the festival became a very convinc-ing display of the vitality of Canadian theatre,

The United States sent the Actors Theatre of Lonisville and New York's Mabou Mines north of the border in partial recognition that Toronto is now the third most theatrically active city in the English-speaking world, led only by London and New York, Israel provided the Habimah National Theatre and Ekkehard Schall appeared for East Berlin's Berliner Ensemble, but the most exciting visitors, appealing directly to The United States sent the Ensemble, but the most exciting visitors, appealing directly to Toronto's large Italian population, were the Teatro Stabile of Aquila. They offered a modern, fast and emotionally violent staging of a mediaeval miracle play, Rappresentazione della Passione, which they made as contemporary as a hijacking. Italy was also the source for the most imaginative and seductive native offering. A very young company called Necessary Angel transformed an entire house into the mansion of Mussolini's tame poet, Gabriele d'Annunzio. The play-to Britain, to Bracknell, which is enterprising.

More obviously major productions frequently ran into large stumbling blocks on their way to opening nights. The Shaw Festival, a distant but integral part of the festival at Niagara-on-the-Lake, nearly lost the rights to its opening production of Shaw's Saint Joan when the Society of Authors threatened to withdraw permission if the director failed permission if the director failed to include the play's epilogue. A musical starring Craig Russell, known in Britain for his performance in the film Outnageous, kept putting off its opening night, apparently happy to stay in previews.

There are more than 40 professional theatres in Toronto, however, and from the oldest resident group, Toronto Workshop Productions, modelled on Joan Littiewood's Theatre Workshop, to the temporary appearance of an emire theatre club run by a talented writer and director named Jim Garrard, the work was of a consistently high standard and rich diversity. TWP's musical documentary on the Canadian Depression, Ten Lout Years, had appeared briefly in London in 1976; but its revival introduced some fine talents to festival visitors, particularly the throaty and intense actress Elizabeth Hanna. Mr Garrard's Salon Theatre, apart from being the nearest equivalent to Edinshowed his own rich skills as a super-realist in a quartet called Pender Pleus for the Country. professional theatres in Toronto, super-realist in a quartet called Bondage Plays for my Country.

Among the many Canadian performances receiving commissions and recognition was a one-woman show by the actressinger Gale Garnett, which displayed a nearly schizophrenic flair for diverse characters. terization. But much the same terization. But much the same acclaim, and commercial opportunity, fell to all the minor British companies on display, which included Triple Action Theatre, the Traverse Theatre Club, the Wakefield Tricycle Company, Shared Experience and Hull Truck, with its Cockroach Trilogy. When the festival next appears, it would do for Britain to be represented by a major troupe, such as the Glasgow Citizens' or the Royal Shakespeare Company.

Stuttgart's dancers at their emotional best

Lady of the Camellias

Coliseum

The Stutteart Bellet, one of London's favourite companies ever since they first came here, returned to the Coliseum on Monday for a fortnight's season with four programmes of works, all but one of which are new to this country. John Neumeier's Lady of the Camellias, created soon after their last visit, was the opening choice and had as turnultuous a recention as you would owner. reception as you would expect for a big romantic dance-drama with Marcia Haydee and Egon

Madsen in the leads. I reported on the ballet from Stuttgart not long after its premiere in 1978, but, as that is quite a while ago, let me remind you that the music is by Chopin (a contemporary of Dumas), entirely piano solos in the middle act, mostly piano and orchestra in the first and third orchestra in the first and third acts. It proves a good choice, and sounds well at the Coliseum, with the company's three regular plantsts carrying the brunt of the musical interest: Glenn Prince taking part in the stage action, Michiko Ohno and Gunther Schmidt remaining in the pit. the pit.

neumeier's adaptation stays much closer to the original novel than any other spoken, sung or danced version I know. That is both its strength and its weakness. The disadvantage is that it has led him to a structure that puts the emphasis more on paration, then on chargests. narration than on choreogra-phic development. He has also included episodes about Manon Lescaut (seen as a parallel to Marguerite Gautier) which are intellectually justified but dra-matically districting matically distracting.

The advantage of fidelity to Dumas, however, is that the hero and heroine both have big roles full of strong emotion, which the Stuttgart dancers know how to make the most of. There are two other There are two other Marguerites to follow at successive performances: Birgit Keil, whom I already know to have found her own gratifyingly individual reading of the part, and Lucia Isenring, whose performance I look forward to seeing.

But the role was made for Haydee and she gives a tremendous performance in it, although one that is matched by Madsen's Armand. For the past two decades, ever since John Cranko began to shape her career, Marcia Haydee has been the best dramatic ballerina in Europe, perhaps anywhere, and the passion she puts into this ballet, the eagerness and shame and devotion, is the match of her other famous characters, in both intensity and subtlety. Madsen, too, is one of the great dancers of our time. Like Haydee, he has reached the stage in his career where virtuosity no longer comes so smoothly as once it did, but his dancing is always exceptional in its expressiveness as well as its elegance.

The ballet is built largely on duets; there are times when one might welcome more solos, but might welcome more solds, but Neumeier never forgets that he has a story to tell, and the duets always let you know what the characters would be saying to each other if they were talking.

That is true of the lesser roles too. Manon and Des Grieux remain fairly conven-tional, since they are supposed to be figures from a book, but Susanne Hanke and Christopher Boatwright let a serious pre-dicament become visible through their stilted attitudes.

Reid Anderson brings a warm dignity to Duval pere and Marcis Lesins makes the Duke a Marcis Lesins makes the Duke a commanding figure. Notable, too, is the smiling spite with which Nora Kimball plays Marguerite's rival, Olympia. However, the ensemble playing has long been one of the Stuttgart Ballet's special strengths, and it is the collective result that you notice more than strong individual performances in the supporting cast.

The designs, by Jørgen Rose, have the easy style we expect of his work. Seizing the auction of Marguerite's goods as the natural starting-point, Neumeier and he have opted for a few properties in a sparse setting, with the suctioneer and his assistants changing the scenes: relying for richness and colour on the richness and colour on the costumes. It is a device that works handsomely and well.

Rutger Hauer: from Holland to Hollywood

While America produces actors who are instinctive and ambitious, and England ones who are well trained and doggedly professional, Europe seems to throw up actors who are both highly talented and determindly eccentric. Such is Rutger Hauer, a Dutch actor (the Dutch actor?) who is making the rare transition from being a film star in his own country to film star in his own country to becoming a Hollywood leading man.

Of course, it helps that he speaks fluent English and has a handsome profile. But his real break came with his perform-ance in the Dutch film Soldier of Orange, about a Resistance hero in German-occupied Hol-land. The film reached the filtered down to Los Angeles, where Hauer struck a chord among Hollywood producers, always eager for anyone who can look and act in the heroic mould. Hauer has completed his first American film, Night-hawks, which opens in London this week, and is in the middle of his second, Blade Runner, for the British director Ridley for the British director Kidley Scott (who made Alien).

"The strange thing was that I thought for a long time before I accepted to do Soldier of Courage", Hauer recalls. "I'd been out of work one year at the time: so I shouldn't have hesitated. But I'd been in the army myself and hated it. And the character, although based the character, although based on a real person, was sort of a boy scout character. You never really knew what he was thinking or feeling. I met the real man and I said to him: 'I real man and I said to him: 'A don't think I'm going to like you, your autobiography is boy scout stuff'. He waited a minute, then he said: 'well, you're right'. We became good friends. He'd emigrated to the United States after the war, sold waters at less Angeles, then underwear in Los Angeles, then moved to Hawaii. His son was one of those who refused to go and fight in Vietnam. I think for him that was very hard to deal with, though he respects his son for it now." In Nighthawks Hauer plays an international terrorist pur-sued by — and pursuing — a New York cop (Sylvester Stal-lone). Nighthawks, too, has its roots in real life. "It's based on the life of Carlos, the terrorist, but very loosely. I had a lot of problems on that film princi-pally with Stallone. I had to fight him all the time on the level of what I thought was good enough for the part and what he thought was good enough. I was very angry when I made Nighthawks, very aggressive, very alert, very awake. I don't think I've ever been more motivated or done my own work better. I didn't trust anyone. One of the things the police I spoke to told me was, if you are a terrorist, you never throw a gun away. Well, I never throw a gun away. Well, I throw away a gun in the film. I lost a big fight over that. I wanted the film to be more authentic than it was.

"When you think about it, acting is a ridiculous profession because all of us play killers most of the time. Most films and television shows are thrillers. But I don't believe people imitate what they see on the imitate what they see on the screen. There are a lot of sick screen. There are a lot of sick people out there, and maybe we're sick too because we show them sick films. But it's individuals who turn into terrorists or assassinate public. figures. That whole business with Hinckley and Jodie Foster with Hinckley, and Jodie Poster, doesn't ring true to me. I think the relationship between films and real life is generally the other way around. I remember when I was making Nighthawks I had one sleepless night when I thought: What if Carlos objects thought what if he turns up on my doorstep? What would I do? In the end, I told myself, weil, I don't know what I'd do, and I forgot about it." Hauer, 37, comes from a family of actors, but it took him a long time to follow in their footsteps. He ran away to sea when he was 16, lasted a year and gave it up because "Every'In a different way, perhaps.

I play a robot warrior. There are five of us and we are indistinguishable from human beings. I like it because the story plays with the tension between what is real and what isn't. As an actor, I always try to find the reality in a part and then go a little beyond it — I like to cheat a limle. Films aren't, real, after all. "I was the first actor in Holland to make a career in films. It was a conscious thoice although I didn't bave many other choices at the time. I wasn't in great demand. As it:

turned out, there were five or six of us who had sufficient presence to succeed on the screen and, together with a very-talented director, Paul Verhoeven, we made something happen in Holland for five years. Sylvia Kirstel was one of our group. When we all left the country, the Dutch film indus-try virtually collapsed. We were accused of disloyalty and that sort of thing, but I don't accept it. To me, it's like children leaving home: if you want to grow, you have to move on.

It's the perfect metaphor for what an actor does." wharan actor does."

Hauer grins delightedly. He is known for the humour he brings to his roles: his Nighthauks, terrorist is the very prototype of the villain who smiles and murders while he smiles. "I read somewhere a think I was, I think it's stiple to be a grown-up male going from barbour to harbour, spending your time with hookers in bars." A couple of stints at drama school (punctuated by his expulsion) followed while he lived the life of a beatnik poet. In between, he joined the Dutch army and had himself discharged on the smiles. "I read somewhere a terrorist saying once you learn to pull a switch in your head, it's easy to kill people. That's exactly how I played Wulfgar, a man who could be perfectly charming one minute and shoot

His hair is cut in a punk crew-cut and bleached a brilliant white and he says he misses his painter-girlfriend. The couple have been together 11 years and live in a small country house in Holland ("as a Dutch film star, you don't make too much money"). Hauer says he is "On a springboard at the moment. I don't know whether I'll have to move to America or I'll have to move to America or not. Ideally, Pd like to move between the two countries. That is, if they'll let me back into the is, if they'll let me back into the States. When I came for Nighthawks I got to New York airport with a one-way ticket and 10 cents in my pocket. The Comedy of Errors

Regent's Park

It was Richard Digby Day who first weamed the Open Air Theatre from its infantile pastoral dier and he now shows it to be a perfectly acceptable setting for the most city-bound of Shakespeare's comedies.

The whole story of this play's return to the repertory is that of its escape from the severe geometry of the classical street scene, and, like other recent directors, Mr Day has arrived at something very different from one-track intrigue by expanding the environment. Logical errors remain the comic mainspring, but they are now expressed through an anarchic extravaganza that inconsistencies, and moments of glamour. Ephesus at first seems to be a small Italian town in the 1880s with tattered opera in the 1880s with tattered opera posters on the walls and the lights of the ducal palace glinting through the trees. Before Shakespeare gets a word in we see a bet canto serenade silenced by a brimming chamber pot, and, when Egeon begins pleading his case, his captors can only look at each other and shrug, "Inglese?".

The Duke then proceeds to conduct the rest of the scene in fluent blank verse. If a show can get away with that it can get away with anything; as this show does by countering the Italian militia with a German police force, a Texan merchant who draws two six-shooters on who draws two six-shooters on Antiphilus and a Frankenstein-fike Doctor Pinch who converses with the Devil through a stethoscope and hands out electric shock therapy.

For anyone resistant to such carryings on it would be easy to compile a dismissive catalogue of Mr Day's hoary vaudeville tricks, from Dromio's leap into the arms of a waiting officer, a fleeing victim's attempt to pass himself off as a statue, to the general chorus of "aaahs" at the final reconciliation.

Thanks to the snap precision with which they are carried out, I found they worked as well as ever, especially as they permit the production occasionally to flower into visual poetry when the serenade returns and the girls stand poised in the twilight in their Watteau silks.

The production enjoys the services of one extremely inventive clown, Ian Talbot, whose Syracusan Dromio builds up laughs with tremendous speed and definition. If you take your eyes off him for 10 seconds, you are liable to have lost an equal number of gags.
The two Antipholuses (Christopher Baines and Bill Buffery) go effectively berserk without turning cruel: it being in the style of the production to soften the hard comic edges, and present the girls (Gabrielle Drake and Janet Spencer-Turner) as affronted victims but never as Irving Wardle

an impossible task, indeed it is more feasible in terms of Gaelic

Mark van de Wiel played then with truly Ritual attack, and fervour for every phase and nuance, also with implications of later Stravinsky in Paris and America, so that the music brought The Rite and Ragtime forward, as it were, into our own generation where, I am sure, they still belong.

The Chamber Concerto be-longs to Ligeti's bridge-period from smudge-impressionism (a quite legitimate style with which he composed numerous works of abiding eloquence and durability) to expressive linear music. This performance, scru pulously prepared and played with an elegance that spoke of devotion, brought out the animation of the first movement, the lyricism of the second (a magical horn solo), the lapper wit of the fourth.

Bedford, as gifted as any British composer of his generation (born 1937), began brilliantly, then fell into musical stagnation, with minimal inven-tion extended maximally into something like neo-classical Muzak Lately he seemed to be recovering. His Symphony does involve repetitiousness, and harmonically he still favours a degree of stagnation.

Most of the pieces in this book are good, and some are fine short stories, but the best is "The Kugelmass Episode", a hilarious tale about a bald Jewish professor who is put by a magician into the pages of Madame Bovary so that he can seduce the heroine of the novel. Perhaps, I think, because the small neat print of that magazine is funnier than the large tourist-sized print of this book. To extend the theory, I have tried

How Benn gets the unions in his pocket

by Paul Routledge, Labour Editor

The dominoes are falling for Mr. Tony Benn. Train drivers, hakers and furniture workers have joined the growing list of unions backing him and, even more critically, his policies. The Benn campaign group now reckon he stands a very good chance of winning the Labour Party deputy leadership.

It should come as 'no surporters were the first to realize that the widening of the leadership election franchise deter-mined upon by the Wembley special conference dramatically changed the nature of the elec-

Instead of being confined to small coterie of MPs, the entire labour movement is now involved, directly or indirectly. So he took the hustings out to where the decisions are made, the spring and summer trade union policy conferences.

With hindsight, it required no great political acumen to appreciate the significance of this shift in the party's leader-ship election constituency. But by getting in first, and by win-ning the votes of some key centre-left unions (most notably Mr Clive Jenkins's ASTMS and the print union Sogat) his campaign gained an early momentum and credibility in the unions that his rivals will

The technique was simple. Each new year, the TUC publishes for internal consumption (and the guidance of industrial correspondents) a list of all the union conferences that year, de-tailing where and when they will be held.

In the past, these conferences were largely ignored by Labour politiciaus, unless they wanted to deliver an ex-cathedra speech on the perils of wage inflation or the up a private deal with union leaders on incomes policy. And the politicians only

Tony Banks : tireless work for the Benn campaign.

Guided by a small group of experienced trade union activists who knew how to play the conference field, Mr Benn simply stood this system on its head. Instead of waiting to be asked to orate from the plat-form, he invited himself to a fringe" meeting organized by his supporters.

Now, unlike the Labour Party-conference, which has an official fringe with its own printed guide to the competing flat-earthist attractions, the TUC and trade union conferences do not encourage serious business outside working hours, Custom and practice dic-tates that the evenings are set aside for more convivial pastimes, But Mr Beon has demonstra-ted that there is an appetite or politicking among delegates And, as the example of the ASTMS conference showed, this enthusiasm when professionally tapped and channelled, can overturn the preferences of union leaders, who until now will end. For not only do the rank and file actually seem to like Mr Benn, they like what he says. And wherever he goes— and that is practically every-where; in one recent week he travelled more than 1,000 miles travelled more than 1,000 miles on the campaign trail—the message is the same. It is a five-point plan, geared now only to pulling in union votes in the deputy leadership poll but also to popularizing the left's political message, Based on party conference decisions, it calls for restoration of full employment by the next Labour government through Labour government through the alternative economic strategy"; expansion of hous-ing, health and other public services; defence of the trade unions and an extension of "self-government" in industry; withdrawal from the EEC, and non-nuclear defence policy for Britain.

In effect, Mr Benn has achieved single-handedly in a matter of weeks what the hard-line left has been striving for over many years—the politiciza-tion of union conferences. He has done it, moreover, by working on the political sympathies of the lay delegates rather than through the trade union bureaucracy.

On the assumption that the electoral college for the party leadership election (in which, the unions have the largest say) is here to stay, that is a per-manent change that Labour, politicians will have to come to terms with. And in taking a policy decision on who to support in the election, union conferences bave to weigh up the policies of the rival candidates. So, at the very least, the delegates are exposed to the left's arguments and the system becomes a recruiting sergeant for Mr Benn and his allies.

Way through the conference season, Mr Benn has won the

Mr Benn's advisers cover a broad range of backgrounds and unions, coming together under the umbrella of the Rank and File Mobilizing Committee. The campaigners are even now doing their sums on the deputy leadership election. Their "worst case" analysis is that Mr Healey will top the first poll, with Mr Benn coming second and Mr Silkin third. But it is calculated, Mr Healey will more or less exhaust his resources on the first ballor as he did in the actual leadership race against Mr Foot, and the bulk of the Silkin votes would then go to Mr Benn second time round. The Benn campaign group reckons he has a very good chance of emerging as the

However the voting figures finally stack up, it is already abundantly clear that Bennism will survive this party election, and that the new system of choosing the leader has had political repercussions in the Labour movement far beyond

Catching the mood of America

At this time of the year, every university, college, academy and even high school in America holds its graduation undeniably anxious.

Again undeniably true, again undeniably anxious.

"If ignorance is the beginning of wisdom, we are beginning to be wise. If the strong rather perversely known as know their weaknesses, we are beginning to be strong." Those words of Mr Sovern catch the mood, and the prescriptions are forested and middle courses. At this time of the year, every

Whatever influence it may have had on the girls, its effect on the headmistress seems to been unfortunate: A months later she was charged with shooting her lover, and she is now serving a life sentence for his murder.

Presidents are of course the biggest catch for any institution. President Reagan this year addressed Notre Dame Univer-sity and West Point in speeches of very different characters which are worth examining. But the commencement addresses of others are also interesting. The speakers set out to pass on their wisdom to "tomorspeeches tell us what they are now thinking as today's leaders. Commencement addresses used to be inspired by confidence in America's future. Most of this year's have a common theme of anxiety and this has been true for some years. But what is interesting is that, although the last election was said to reflect a returning confidence in America, the anxiety persists this year. The President's addresses were not-able as exceptions.

Speaking at Duke University, William Styton, the dovelist, said that America today may be, as Years once said of Ireland, overwhelmed by responsibility, longing for psychological truth". The case for a touch on the accelerator

Is protectionism the answer? not now registered as unem-David Blake, Economics ployed would take some of the Editor, concludes his analysis jobs which became available. Editor, concludes his analysis of the alternatives to Mrs Thatcher's economic policies.

The most radical solution to Britain's economic problems is drastically to increase demand and to impose import controls. Today we look at the impact of a £6,000m boost to the economy, coupled with a tough 30 per cent tariff on all imports of manufactured goods. To stop importers gerting round this by bringing in their goods in kit form, we extended the rariff to and by early 1984 the growth cover what are technically rate would be lower than under-called semi-manufactured goods. If the aim is to create jobs, this would be much the most successful of the policies we tried. The boost to public spending would provide about 300,000 jobs in the public sector by early 1984. The competitive edge given to our manufacturers in the home market would allow them to employ another 300,000.

As with all policies which create lobs, the resulting fall in unemployment would be less That is because people who are current policies. But the stimulus starts to fade unless another boost was given.

On growth and employment, the policy would produce much better results, over the next few years than the present strategy. ful at stimulating investment. The forecast produced for us by the Economist Intelligence Unit suggests that manufacturing investment would be 10 per cent higher in early 1984 than under current strategy.

The first time we asked the model what would happen with import controls it went berserk, turning out meaningless strings of figures. We had forgotten that it now includes provision to pay over to Brussels all the duties imposed on goods entering Britain.

We tried again, telling the model to let the British Government hold on to the distinctly less rosy. One is a tariffs which it collected. It is problem which the use of the doubtful if an import tariff of this kind is consistent with EEC

Where the model can be of greater help is in gauging what would happen to prices and to living standards. But before it could answer our questions on this, we had to tell it what British firms were ports rather than using a tariut. That is impossible to test using any economic model, but it seems unlikely. The alm of protection is to force people to switch away from imports towards British goods. If that was done by rationing the imports

What is the main conclusion which emerges from looking at the three alternatives to the Government's strategy? On one level, it is a very depressing one. Things have already gone one way that people might hope to get round it is by limiting the quantity of certain imports rather than using a tariff.
That is impossible to test using any economic model, but it seems unlikely. The aim of proterriors is to force morals to so far, and so much worse is certain to come, that even an immediate change of policy could not reduce unemployment significantly without risking a new spurt of inflation.

agents for Warrington's most lamous landmark, the Vladivar vodka

Kirkwoods recently roused local wrath with a competition in which they offered a week's holiday in Warrington to the winner-and two weeks to the runner-up. Now they have gone even further with an advertisement on the railway line near Crewc—gateway to War-rington—which pictures a bottle of Vladivar and asks: "Why else come to Warrington?"

The ad caused a rumpus at the last meeting of the town's borough council which resulted in a stiffly worded letter of protest to G & J Greenall, which owns the distillery. A council spokesman said: "The town is not crawling with Russian agents looking for the Vladivar recipe and we're sick of being treated as a joke."

Peter Kirvan, the Kirkwood whiz-kid responsible for the Viadivar account, said: "The campaign has done Warrington nothing but good. It's been going for eight years, and Vladivar now has 20 per cent of the fastest growing spirit market."

What would Kirvan do to boost the image of the Social Democrats in Warrington? "Pd have a tank circling the town with the Gang of Four on board dressed as Russians, and Roy Jenkins saying: Just get the formula right and we're away!"

Will Sir Colin make a move to Munich?

Sir Colin Davis, musical director of the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, looks set to take charge of the Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra in succession to Rafael Kubelik, who is retiring. The BRSO, Germany's premier radio orchestra is based in Munich.

Neither Sir Colin nor the opera house management is saying anything for the moment, but I understand that negotiations have been going on for about six weeks and everyone hopes something can be worked out.

Sir Colin is keen to take the job. It will not affect his duties at Covent Garden but may mean that be will have to cut down on some engagements in America. Still to be settled is when he will start, the exact amount of time he will spend in Germany, and whether any opera work should be included.

The BRSO was founded in 1949 by Eugene Jochum, who gave it a strong Bruckner flavour. Jochum was followed in 1961 by Kubelik, who added his own interest in Mahler. The orchestra is characterized by a warm, full sound with a scrong woodwind section:

For some years Rybakov has been regarded as one of Russia's "tame Jews", a visible token by which the authorities seek to prove they are not anti-semitic. Heavy Sand, for example, is about the persecution of Jews in Russia by the Nazis during the Second World War and is one of Second World War and is one of very few recent Russian works illowed to show the Jewish plight. At the same time it whitewashes the rough treatment of the Jews at the hands of the Russians themselves, especially in the Ukraine, before the war. It has been derided by Russian Jewish

WILL FRANCE GIVE A LEAD?

The new French Government seems to have got itself into a muddle over nuclear testing. Friday's decision to suspend underground tests on a Pacific island has now been followed by the announcement that tests will in fact be resumed. However, no date has been given, so it looks as if M Mitterrand is trying to win time for thought while keeping his options open.
Obviously he is exposed to conflicting advice on the subject. But although his hesitations are probably caused largely by domestic political considerations they could be useful if they load to a new examination of the whole problem of nuclear tests, which might influence other countries

All tests are dangerous. Even underground tests have a tendency to leak and thereby contribute to radiation in the atmosphere. The contribution is, barring accidents, very small, but it is there. If there were overriding security reasons for continuing tests the hazard would be sufficiently small to be faced, but the experts disagree on how much real need there is for further tests. Some argue, that tests are essential not only to keep up in the arms race but also to ensure that existing nuclear weapons still work. Others say that with all the perfectly possible to maintain and develop nuclear weapons without any more testing at all.

However, it would be very difficult for any nuclear power to abandon tests on its own. Aslong as the arms race continues. any state which is trying to maintain a nuclear arsenal will be under very strong internal pressure to continue testing. The only effective answer, therefore, is a comprehensive test ban treaty. Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union have been in negotiation on the subject since 1977 and have made considerable progress, even on the sensitive subject of verification - though this is not yet entirely solved. However, President Carter put the subject on ice while he battled with the strategic arms limitation talks, and Mr Reagan's Administration has not even got around to appoint-ing a delegation because it is still trying to work out its whole approach to arms control. France is not involved in these negotiations. Nor did it sign the Non-Proliferation Treaty of 1968. However, it did re-join the United Nations Committee on Disarmament in 1978, and it is proposing a European Disarmament Conference under the auspices of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, now knowledge now available it is bogged down in Madrid. It is, therefore, involved in the subject of disarmament. It now has an opportunity to become more involved by showing an interest in the Comprehensive Test Ban negotiations, perhaps by making the continuation of its own suspension of testing conditional upon rapid progress towards a

> This might give the negotiations a much-needed push. Not that the CTB treaty would have a decisive impact on arms control as a whole. Its contribution there would be modest in more than the planned three years it would slightly slow down the development of new weapons. However, it could help to make the Non-proliferation Treaty more effective because one of the reasons why this treaty has had such very limited influence on third world coun-tries is that the signatories have failed to carry out their obligation under the treaty to end the arms race, to "undertake effective measures in the direction of nuclear disarmament", and "to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time" France has a particularly bad record in contributing to nuclear proliferation. M Mitterrand could now give a lead in a better direction.

RATES OUT OF JOINT

When local councils draw up their budgets, they always allow a little extra for unforeseen events. Nowadays, Mr Heseltine regularly comes along afterwards and makes them take it out again. In the ordinary course of events, the year-usually passes without the nest-cgg being needed, and the eventual out-turn is lower than the hydgered force. the budgeted figure.

It is hard to say how far Mr Heseltine's bumping-down activities affect the result. Budgets for the financial year two months old are about as far in percentages above the target for current spending as were those for last year, for which expenditure is expected to come within one or two per cent of the target when the sums are complete. The over budgeting councils include many Tory ones. But the strategic need to keep the closest restraint on public expenditure is so acute that Mr Heseltine's precaution is worth taking, so long as the accompanying sound and fury is not allowed to obscure the truth that local government has responded far better in recent years to appeals of this kind than departments of central government have.

This is so even though the Government's sanction of withdrawal of grant is a very imperfect one. Councils determined to maintain their spending can recoup the lost grant from the rates. After the local government elections, more councils than before may be ready to consider defiance of this kind. Mr Heseltine's undefined threats about immediate counter-action in the current year reflect that anxiety. His new block grant powers, intended to enable him to penalize overspending councils while leaving obedient ones un-scathed, are useful in principle, but they were enacted in such a hurry that they penalize many councils that have done their best to conform while leaving big spenders scarcely affected. And since the Government's basic interest is in aggregate spending, councils of all colours local spending is paid for not by the ratepayer but from general taxation through the grant. Sixty per cent of the remainder is paid for not by the local elector but by the disenfranchized commercial ratepayer. In many cities the domestic rate is even less important, and it is often disguised for the payer by its incorporation into council rent demands: it may be no coincidence that many of the most resolutely extravagant councils held sway in just such areas.

These weaknesses have been apparent for years, and grow-increasingly harmful. Yester-day's promise of a major study of methods of replacing the rates altogether was hardly over-hasty for a party commit-ted to abolition since the mid-seventies. But the factors which have made the Tories hesitate still apply. The rates have their faults, but so do all the alternatives which have been put forward. A local spending crisis. this year or next might drive the Government to further hurried legislation threatening local the present assisted places scheme. But the point has been reached where real local discretion can only be safeguarded by means of a stable and widely acceptable reform of local finance.

THE HARASSMENT OF MR BANI-SADR

The campaign by Islamic funda-mentalists in Iran against President Bani-Sadr scems to be gaining momentum. Two of the President's advisers have now been arrested on charges of bribery and corruption. Prominent supporters of Mr Bani-Sadr, including the Governor of the Central Bank, Mr Ali Reza Nowbari, have been harassed and threatened by the Revolutionary Guards. Liberal-minded newspapers have been closed down and then "allowed" to reopen. Most serious of all, the three man "conciliation commission appointed by Ayatollah Khomeini to adjudicate between the moderate group around Mr Bani-Sadr and the hardline clergy of the Islamic Republican Party has found in favour of the latter. The commission has accused the President of violating the constitution, and although no legal action was recommended there have been renewed calls for Mr Bani-Sadr to be put on trial. Despite this increased pressure, Mr Bani-Sadr remains in a strong position. The conciliation commission was weighted against him from the first, since it consisted of one Bani-Sadr supporter, one nominee of the IRP, and one member appointed by Ayatollah Khomeini. Although the Ayatollah's man was in theory neutral, he leaned toward the clergy, thus making an outcome unfavourable to the President almost certain. In any case, the commission will have some difficulty proving that Mr Bani-Sadr has in fact violated the constitution. His main offence, judging by the commission's report, is that he refused to sign a Bill, already passed by the Majlis (Parliament), empowering the Govern-ment to appoint Ministers to those portfolios still vacant. Since the Majlis is dominated by the fundamentalists of the IRP, this has become something of a test case. But the constitution although ambiguously worded on this as on other points— appears to give the President the power to vet Ministerial appointments, and it will take a great deal of legal wrangling to prove otherwise. The vehemence of the fundamentalists' attacks on the President may well therefore be due, not to any feeling that the tide is turning their way, but rather to anxiety in the face of the vigorous, increasingly combative attitude adopted by the moderates. The struggle between the two factions is by no means clear cut, and the refusal of Ayatollah Khomeini to take sides in a decisive way has added to the confusion. The present phase of the struggle stems from a rally at Tehran University in March, at which to pull Iran out of its economic supporters of the President and political isolation. The turned on the fundamentalist danger is that they will none the gangs who were harassing them. Since then Mr Bani-Sadr has spoken out strongly in the moderate cause, chiding the further dogmatic clergy for "trying to return Iran to tyranny". At the air force base at Shiraz last policies.

week, the President defied attempts by the IRP to "outmanoeuvre me by insults and abuse", as he put it, and declared that he was not afraid of threats to put him on trial.

The armed forces remain Mr Bani-Sadr's principal base. The President is also commander in thief, and although setbacks in the Gulf War could yet undermine him, the fact that Iran has held off Iraqi attacks over a period of ten months has redounded to his credit. Above all, Mr Bani-Sadr's standing remains high among the Iranian people, who elected him by majority vote in the first place.
The IRP's jibe that liberals of Mr Bani-Sadr's stamp spent alife of ease in Paris before the revolution, and therefore do not know the Iranian people, may appeal to the more obscurantist elements in Iranian society, but will not wash with those who know the President and his advisers to be patriots who combine genuine devotion to Islam with moderate left-wing views. The fundamentalists have yet to show that they have any workable alternative to the sensible and realistic policies with which Mr Bani-Sadr hopes less manage to use Ayatollah Khomeini's current ban on political speeches to restrict still further the limited oppor-tunities available to the President to canvass support for his

Inner-city churches

From the Reverend Gavin Reid Sir, I write in support both of the point Canon Eric James (May 27) made about the plight of the inner city churches in our country and of his suggestion for an archbishop's commission on the problem.

I write as a staff member of the Church Pastoral Aid Society and in that capacity I travel widely throughout England and have seen. many of our urban parishes at close quarters. The overwhelming convicrion that comes to me from all this is that the Church of England is really two churches. On the one hand there are the suburban and commuterland churches, which certainly seem to be in better heart than 15 years ago and where, in many instances, attendances are moving up again.

. It is not uncommon to find such parishes spending hundreds of thousands of pounds to extend and reappoint their premises. A developreappoint their premises. A develop-ing feature of our times is the engagement by some of these churches of full-time paid untrained administrative and pastoral staff—a factor which needs to be remembered when we look at clergy statistics. On the other hand we see the closures, amalgamations and the morale-sapping battle against van-dalism which typifies many of our urban situations. I recently visited a largely local authority housing area in one of our large cities where two clergy are expected to minister to over 80,000 people through four worship centres. It goes without saying that there are no extension projects or extra lay staff to be found there.

To complete the picture I should add that the rural parishes are also facing very serious staffing and financial problems. If this two-churches situation is allowed to continue then, as far as the national church is concerned. Christianian church is concerned, Christianity may well have organised itself into a: middle-class phenomenon within the next decade or so.

In saying this I do not want to imply that the Church of England's record in trying to minister to the people of our cities is poorer than those of other denominations. In many ways our record is better than most. We have "hung in there" longer than many of the Free Churches because of our central financing and through some magnificent clergy and other Christian workers who often feel isolated and unsupported by the rest of the And yet I have the feeling that

Anglicans have largely become parochialists and that there exists very little national will to minister sacrificially amongst our fellow citizens in the urban areas. Yours sincerely, GAVIN REID, Church Pastoral Aid Society,

Sir, I think I may not be alone in feeling increasingly irritated at so frequently reading statements by politicians and others about how patient and self-controlled our soldiers and policemen are when faced with the prospect of death or mutilation from petrol bombs, acid, rocks and other dangerous missiles. No other country's security forces one reads ad nauseam, would confine their response to plastic bullets. Could it not be, Sir, that other countries are right? There is such a thing as under-reaction, and this can not only delay a solution to the problem but also jeopardize quite unjustifiably the safety of the young men and women whom we commit to the fray. We cannot excuse this by praising their self-

Reducing the burden of rates

Sir, The erratic operation of the new local government block-grant sys-tem, coupled with the anomalies created by the prospect of rate-free enterprise zones, has stimulated fresh demands for rating reform. Hard-pressed businessmen, faced with rising rate demands and having no effective vote or voice in local affairs, are pressing for the abolition of the rating system or for more central controls. Both courses are fraught with dangers. The original plan, prepared by Mrs Margaret Thatcher in August, 1974. "to abolish the domestic rating system and replace it by taxes more system and replace it by taxes more broadly based and related to people's ability to pay", and to do so within the normal lifetime of a Parliament, has foundered on the formidable obstacles in the way of finding alternative (and no doubt equally impleasant) levies.

The alternative of re-jigging the basis of government grants and basis of government grants and imposing more central control has not worked and will not work. Moreover it is a basic tenet of Conservative philosophy to encourage local democracy rather than to strengthan the unaugheoid of Whitchall over every detail of our national and regional life

This does not mean that nothing can be done. The Government should take steps to implement the first proposal which Mrs Thatcher made in 1974, namely that: "In the medium term we shall transfer to control government the cost of central government the cost of teachers' salaries up to a specified number of teachers for each local education authority. Expenditure on police and the fire services will qualify for increased grants from the Exchequer. We shall see that this saving is passed on to the ratepayer." ratepayer."
In present circumstances the best

From Mr Geoffrey Rippon, QC, MP for Hecham (Conservative) and fairest way of passing on that saving would be to introduce a measure of industrial and commercial de-rating.

This would not prejudice longer-term action nor preclude the Government from taking decisions on the more comprehensive recommendations in the neglected Layfield report. Nor would it prevent Mr Heseltine negotiating, as he must in the traditional way, on a more rational distribution of grants and the acceptance of local expendi-ture targets in line with current Yours faithfully, GEOFFREY RIPPON, held.

In the period covered by the recent public expenditure White Paper (1975-76 to 1981-52), local authorities' expenditure is shown to have fallen by 20.9 per cent, while spending under the direct control of central covernment has increased by central government has increased by 7.9 per cent.

It is easy to see why councils have been forced to control their spending when the Government has not done so. Rates are highly visible and thus less popular than other forms of taxation or Government borrowing. The strength of rates is that, unlike most regular taxation, they make taxpayers aware of what they are paying. This is a most compelling reason for their reten-purposes which benefit the people of our two parishes.

It would be improper to mention the many ways that we have been able to help with the education of individual children or young people;

individual children or young people; I will, however, mention that we have never yet helped enyone at a fee-paying school. We have also helped the parent-teacher associations of the three local education authority schools in Peterchurch and Chifford, Fairfield High School and the two county primary schools, to obtain equipment for their schools which the county council could not afford to provide.

could not afford to provide.

John Smith was grateful for the hospitality of the people of Peterchurch and Clifford. He had no special gratitude to any Secretary of State. I think he would approve of the way that we, his trustees, dispense his bounty. Any government of any political complexion which stole these ancient local endowments would incur the hostility of the people of the many endowed parishes and towns in this life, and, no doubt, of the benefac-tors themselves in the next!

University control.

From Professor John Griffith

Sir, It is now becoming clear that the University Grants Committee is preparing a detailed set of instruc-tions to which universities will be required to conform on pain of losing financial support. These instructions will; it seems, not only give separate orders to different universities but will direct courses of action to be taken affecting specific subjects, faculties and their scope and intensity, rival the political control exercised over universities by the worst statist regimes of recent times. It is almost unbelievable that the Secretary of State for Education and Science -the UGC is no more than an advisory committee to the Govern-ment — should embark on so blatant an invasion of the rights and abligations of ancient and modern universities.

It cannot be too strongly empha-sized that universities must, in a free society, make their own decisions on how to spend their reduced income. Any other way of proceeding must destroy, probably forever, the independence of univer-

Labour's plans for private education ———

From Mr R. J. Recs

Sir, The Labour plan (your Education Correspondent's report, May 27) for killing off the independent schools and creating a virtual state monopoly in education will surprise nobody, though it is hard to understand how anyone, who has observed the working of state education over the past three decades can be so eager to destroy the alternative. the alternative.

The importance of having such an The importance of having such an alternative was nicely illustrated in 1945-51. when, (under a Labour government) selection at 11 plus was all the rage. Many thousands of parents who resented their children being branded as failures at that tender age looked to the independent schools for help. A number of such schools for help. A number of such schools particularly some of such schools, particularly some of the smaller ones, were able to prove that the "failures" were often perfectly capable of being educated to university level. The principle of comprehensive education was thus established by some of the very schools Mr Kinnock and his friends now want to destroy.

Of course it is "unfair" that private schools are at present only available to the reasonably well-off, and I share Mr Kinnock's dislike of for a more equal society. But a totalitarian system of education is too high a price to pay.

Yours faithfully, R. J. REES, Manor Farmhouse, Grantchester, Cambridge. May 28.

From Prebendary John C. de la T. Sir, You report that a joint Labour Party-TUE-policy statement proposes that the next Labour Government would distribute a short Bill to Perliament to "transfer responsibility for any trusts with educational purposes from the Charity Com-missioners back to the Secretary of State for Education". Britain abounds in trusts for Britain abounds in trusts for educational purposes, overseen by the Charity Commissioners. I am a trustee of two such trusts, in different parishes of the Golden Valley. Here is a typical one:

John Smith was a cattle drover of, if I remember right, the seventeenth

if I remember right, the seventeenth century, whose normal route took him through these parts. In the parishes of Clifford and Peterchurch he found such a hospitable welcome that when he died he left sufficient money to found a school in each parish, and almshouses in Peterchurch for both. In due course the two schools were sold to the county council, and under the direction of the Charity Commissioners the proceeds of the sale were invested to provide a regular income which we, the trustees, are to use, and do use, for educational

Value of books From Mr. Daniel McDowell

Sir, Lord Rothschild's comparison (article, May 26) of the investment performance of his 10 examples of rare literature with shares in Royal Dutch is fascinating but does not demonstrate that collecting is not a good long-term investment, nor even that collecting rare books is a good investment.

If Lord Rothschild had been rather less fashionable in his taste and had bought books, let us say, on this.

Surely we should let it be known publicly that people throwing petrol missiles in Northern Ireland, Brixton, or anywhere else, render themselves liable to be shot with real builets? They would probably then desist. At present hooligans are merely invited to participate in an exciting game with only the slightest risk to themselves.

A few weeks ago I met a young policeman who had voluntarily cut short his leave and gone to Brixton to offer his services, as soon as he heard of the rioting there. How one admired his spirit and that of his colleagues, both men and women but our security forces need and deserve to be allowed adequately to protect themselves.

If they have to risk their lives

they cannot be restricted to patience they cannot be restricted to patterne and plastic bullets. Perhaps on this occasion we are being foolish and irresponsible in differing so markedly from other countries? Yours faithfully. DAVID R. JOHNSTON-JONES. Merchant Taylors' School, Crosby, Liverpool.

England's football malaise

From Mr Stephan Schattmann Sir, I gather all is not well with English football and its place in the World Cup tournament. Would it be seditious talk to suggest that the time has come for Great Britain to follow the example of every other country taking part and field one team drawn from all available talent? After all, as Gerald Sinstadt (feature, June 1) points out, English clubs' win European competitions with contributions from Scots and Dutch players. Wales heads their World Cup qualifying group. And Scotland beats England.

It is highly unlikely that other countries would object. Indeed, in 1972 Latin-American members of that in future World Cup tourna-ments Great Britain should be represented as one country and not under four separate flags. The motion was eventually withdrawn, and I do not know whether the question has been ventilated since.

As for the "political" aspect, the West German squad that won the World Cup in 1974 included several members of Bayern Muenchen and you cannot be more devolution-minded than a Bavarian. Bearing in mind the quite remarkable impact of England's victory in 1966 on the general social climate, the fielding of a British team in 1986 with what must be a better chance of bringing home the cup could well make a contribution of even greater magniobservers has taken its tell on both management and players.

Perhaps Saturday's defeat by Switzerland highlighted this. For the initial 30 minutes England looked agitated and insecure; this turned to near hysteria after conceding two sudden goals to "lowly" Switzerland, a blow from which they were unable to recover. Sorally we should be encouraging and supporting the team, not telling them that, as does the headline over Mr Sinstadt's article, "English soccer has run out of steam". This is the only way to put heart back soccer has run out of steam". This is the only way to put heart back into the squad before next Saturday's vital game in Hungary. We do have great players; it may be symptomatic of the psychological pressures in the England team that cause world-class players like Trevor Francis to perform considerably worse for England than he does for Nottingham Forest.

Yours faithfully, ROBIN C. GADD, 13 Quarrydale Road, Sutton-in-Ashfield,

From Mr Alastair MacGregor and Mr Peter Leaver

Sir, in view of recent events at Basle, will the English Football Association please reassure those of us who support the more successful of the international teams from the

1. That it will support any decision by the Irish or Scottish Football Associations not to send a team to England for fear of violence.

2. That it will ensure that tickets for all future England v Scotland matches will be sold only in Scotland.

May we also rely upon British Rail and London Transport to refuse to serve alcohol to English fans or, indeed, to carry them? Finally, may we assume that the English press will pursue as effective a vendetta against English fans as it has in the past against the lrish and the Scots?

Psychiatric evidence

From Professor Antony Flew Sir, Professor R. S. Bluglass (May Sir, Professor R. S. Eluglass (May 28) gives some explanation of the difficulties facing psychiatria witnesses asked to give evidence to help juries to decide whether an accused person was at the time of the offence subject to such abnormality of mind as would substantially impair his mental responsibility. Among other things Professor Bluglass notices that in practice the degree of abnormality practice the degree of abnormality accepted by the courts as sufficient" varies from case to case. "The degree sufficient to reduce murder to mansiaughter in a 'mercy killing'. for instance, is very different to that required in a case such as Mr. Sutcliffe's."

But what Professor Bluglass certainly does not remark, is that abnormality as such is totally irrelevant to questions of accountability. Someone may deviate from the actual mean or median of either his own society or even of the entire human race without thereby becom-ing any the less able than any of the rest of us to recognize the nature of what he is proposing to do, and to act or to abstain from action at will.

What, surely, the courts ought to be asking the psychiatrists, and what the psychiatrists are uniquely qualified to tell them, is witether the accused was at the time of the offence afflicted with some mental illness, and what were the discomforts and/or incapacities necessarily consequent upon and characteristic of that condition. If it really were mere deviance from some actual average which properly concerned the courts, and not the distress and incapacitation necess-arily consequent upon a sort of illness, then they would have to summon to the witness-box not psychiatrists but psychometrists and social statisticians.

Salvation Army From Dr C. R. C. Heard

Sir, The ATV. documentary, For God's Sake Carel, and General Arnold Brown's prewritten reply (May 27) pose two sets of questions which require honest answers.

I. Concerning Salvation Army hos-tels: Are the homeless ever refused shelter for want of money? If so is this due to local business zeal or army policy? General Brown's jibes about "phoney" investigators and spectators heckling from the side-lines alarmed me much more than the documentary. I preferred the who heads their social department. The army's severest critics were in fact plainly not spectators but people who cared about people.

There is of course nothing wrong in running a guest house or hotel as a business, be it for tramps or millionaires, as long as it is advertised as such. This would exclude, of course, any claim to it being specifically Christian work.

2. Concerning collecting from the public: Christian Aid Week is just behind us and Christians of nearly all denominations have stepped off the sidelines to help. At least in our locality, the Salvation Army excuses itself from this on the grounds that its Christmas collection is a parallel effort. We accepted this. It is therefore a shock to find that most of the money collected goes to driving its own "church" machinery and only 14 per cent to social work.
This, sadly, puts them in the same group as Moonies or Jehovah's Vimesses.

The only possible excuse for collecting from a largely non-Christian public is to help a needy fellow human. Please, General Brown, trust God for your own needs.

Thorpe report From Mr Walter Bluhm

Sir, This morning's radio report of "what the 'papers say". (May 31) opened with the "truth behind the biggest political scandal of the decade". I find the curtain rising again on the drama, which played its full course, and concluded with the acquittal of the principal actor and his co-defendants, unacceptable. The verdict of an English jury should have been the last word.

One of the defendants, through the medium of Floot Street, has now reopened the case although he chose to remain silent at the trial, surely not, as is now suggested, simply as a token of magnanimity. If his "only reason for telling the story is to try to satisfy a relentless curiosity and to bring to an end press persecution is left wondering why the news-paper which published the story 'has paid a substantial fee to a charity in return for (his) cooper-

A journalist's sources

From the Chairman and Joint Managing Director of Granada Sir, Mr Paul Matthews, in his letter

Sir, Mr Paul Matthews, in his letter about the law of contempt (May 28), is mistaken in saying that in the case of BSC v Granada the court ordered that the identity of the source should by revealed in order to enable BSC to take action against him. This is not so. Early in the case BSC made it clear that they had no intention of pursuing any legal action against the source if and action against the source if and when Granada were to name him. It was for this reason that a feature of Granada's defence in the House of Lords rested on the fact that the Norwich Pharmacal remedy was only applicable when there was wrongdoing by the source and a clear intention by the plaintiff to pursue this wrongdoing by means of the law. It would appear, nevertheless, that this did not help Granada's case, which was dismissed.

The changes in the law accepted by the Attorney General are in accord with Lord Salmon's minority judgment in the House of Lords and from the initiative taken by Lord Salmon and Lord Scarman when the Bill was first laid before the House of Lords. It would appear to a layman to be crystal clear that they will ensure that in future no journalist need reveal a source if the reasons for so doing are the sort out forward by BSC. Namely inter alia to dispel the cloud, of suspicion hanging over their employees, including their highest executives. and the need "to clear the air" in order to restore mutual confidence. Psychology: IQ and heredity data study By the staff of Nature

Two American psychologists have put together the most comprehensive collection of data relating to the heredity intelligence yet assembled: and come to no firm conclusion. IQ is inherited, they say, to some extent; but to what extent is not known.

This is rather remarkable, because Dr Thomas J. Bonchard, Jr, and Dr Matthew McGre of the University of Minnesota, review in their article in Science no less than 111 separate studies of IQ among relatives, involving 55,000 pairs of individuals ranging from identical twins to adoptive parents and children (who would be genetically unrelated).

The result of each experiment is a statistical "correlation" between the IQs of the pales of people studied. If the correlation is a statistical for example, one study found the IQ correlations among the experiments reviewed is very large.

For example, one study found the IQ correlations among identical twins reared together to be less than 0.6. Another made out the same correlation to be 0.95. Again, the correlation beween sib the same correlation to be 0.95.
Again, the correlation beween siblings reared together comes out children, who should show zero IQ correlation, actually show a median correlation of 0.19, indicating that the IQ of a child brought up with unrelated parents has a tendency to veer towards that of its parents, or vice versa. Drawing evidence for detailed theories of the inheritance of IQ, and the effect of the environment, from the data, would seem to be hazardons, however, because of the wide variability of the experiments. For example, the correlation found in one study between the IQs of unrelated adopted children is greater than that found in another on identical twins restred together, so to attempt, say, to distinguish differences in IQ correlations between mothers and daughters from mothers and sons would be unjustified.

The conclusion from all this The conclusion from all this painstaking work seems to take one little further than common sense: that IQ does have a genetic determinant, and an environmental one. The problem remains, how to go on from there. there.

nominator has not been determined):
For example, identical twins (which come from the same fertilized orum and so have identical genes) brought up together have an IQ correlation of 0.85 (taking the median of the studies); but such twins brought up apart (three studies and 65 pairs of twins, excluding Sir Cyril Burt's disputed work) score only 0.67.
Thus even identical genes and supposedly identical environments do not lead to identical IQs, an dwith different environments the differences widen.

austers perfectionist with a strong feeling for the big occasion. This was particularly marked when he played for the St Paul's Thanksgiving service after the war and for Sir Winston Churchill's funeral in 1965. Few who heard it will ever forget the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" ringing round the vast building.

· He_ was a sub-conductor at the Coronations both of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth II. He toured North America with the St Panl's choir in 1953 and conducted a concert before President Eisenhower in the White House.

Born at Gloucester of a musical family — he was a descendant of the hymn writer J. B. Dykes — John Dykes Bower was an articled pupil of Sir Herbert Brewer at Gloucester Cathedral before going up to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, as organ scholar and was later holder of the John Stewart Rennoch scholarship in sacred music. His first cathedral post was at

Truro in 1926; three years later Sir Hugh Allen, Professor of Music at Oxford, was instru-mental in his appointment as organist at New College, Oxford. A further move to Durham Cathedral came in 1933 and then to St Paul's in 1936.

Thereafter this was the centre of his musical life. There was a strong bond of mutual affection between him and his choristers. While insistent on high standards he was tircless in encouraging individual musical ability.

He also served as organ professor at the Royal College of Music from 1936 to 1969 and as associate director of the Royal School of Church Music. In both these posts his influence on young musicians was immense.

He saw wartime service in the RAF from 1940 to 1945. He was made a CVO in 1953 and knighted in 1968. One honour be greatly valued came only last year — an honorary fellowship of Corpus Christi, his old Cambridge college: Dykes Bower was president of the Royal College of Organ-ists from 1960 to 1962. After his retirement from St Paul's in 1967 he became honorary secretary to the college where his devoted work enhanced its prestige and reputation. He was one of the musical editors of the 1950 revision of ligmns Ancient and Modern. He was Master of the Company

Worshipful Musicians in 1967-68.

REV DR LEWIS DAVIDSON

The Rev Dr Lewis Davidson, CBE, who died recently in Bermuda, was a missionary of the Church of Scotland who founded. Knox College. A distinguished educationalist with an open, questing mind he translated ideas into action with a vitality and determination that challenged and inspired, and must often have exhausted, his devoted colleagues.

Born in Glasgow in 1915 he graduated from its university with an MA honours degree in philosophy and psychology, gaining the Caird prize. After serving as Scottish Secretary of the Student Christian Movement he went to Jamaica as Headmaster for three years of Wolmer's High School for Boys. There he pondered on the meaning and purpose of Christian education and this led to his great pioneering achievement, the founding of Knox College in Spaldings, Jamaica.

He chose the site an unpro-College in Spaldings, Jamaica.

He chose the site, an unpromising derelict hillside, and with his Jamaican colleague, David Bent, built it up from scratch. Water had to be carried from the river. There was no electricity and they cooked on charcoal stoves. He had a vision of a school in which children would learn to think independently and to work as a team without competitiveness. He wanted a school that would serve the community and raise. wanted a school that would serve the community and raise the standard of life for the neighbourhood. He had no capital but he had faith that the men and the money would be forthcoming. His vision turned into reality, a junior and senior high school for boys and girls, day and residential, in well-planned buildings with lively murals. He aimed at making the college supply its own needs. It

It was a step from that to its own food-processing plant which served not only Knox but other schools and the neighbourhood with nourishing, low-cost meals. They needed buildings and furniture so they made their own at a fraction of the market price. They needed exercise books and stationery and so established Knox Educational Services. In these ways they gave training and employ-ment to the local people. They later developed the Countryman series of houses and shops made of local materials placed in sacks giving durable cheap

Plans to end the reserve asset system for banks should go ahead by the end of July if the authorities keep to their present timetable. It is clear, however, that there is a considerable amount of preparatory work still to be completed.

Ivory Coast threat to cocoa deal

Commodities Correspondent.

The future of the Inter-national Cocoa Organization and of a new agreement between its producing and consuming men-bers was again thrown into doubt yesterday when the Ivory Coast, the world's biggest cocoa rate increases, most central banks prefer to keep a published discount rate. An alternative idea might be for the authorities to publish daily a list of the rates at which they had dealt in hills. producer, said it wanted to withdraw the $50m it had contributed to the old agreement's buffer stock fund.

While the move had been threatened several months ago, it underlines the determination of the Ivory Coast not to join new agreement. The Ivory Coast has maintained that the floor price of 110 cents a pound at which the buffer stock men-ager would be able to intervene under the new agreement is too low.

A meeting has now been called with Dr Kurt Waldheim, the United Nations Secretary General, in Geneva at the end of this month. The terms of the new agreement allow it to come into force without the 25 per cent of world exports contributed by the Ivory Coast, but only if the UN agrees. Should such agreement be forthcoming, the agreement could be incor-porated in the UN Common Fund for commodities. But the new agreement may never come into effect if the Coast presses for its funds. A statement by the West African producer yesterday made it clear that it would press for repayment. The Ivory Coast maintained that the funds be-longed to their country of origin manager could transfer them if that country was no longer a party to the agreement. Officials of the International Cocoa Organization point out. however, that without an agreement the buffer stock manager has no power to make such a transfer. The organization failed to establish a new agreement last year after the previous pact had expired in 1979. Since then it has avoided liquidation by postponing a decision.

Call for British business to help rebuild war-damaged Iraq

Carrington urges Gulf trade drive

Lord Carrington, the Foreign Secretary, yesterday appealed for British businessmen to back the rebuilding of war-damaged Iraq. Speaking at the annual luncheon of the Middle East Association in London he commented on the ups and downs of Britain's political relations with Iraq.

"But over the last year or so, the Iraqis and we have shown that we want to set our relations on a more workmanlike basis", said Lord Carrington. He pointed out that the visit last March of the Iraqi Foreign Minister had been an outstanding success and had greatly improved the political climate. Later this month the Iraqi trade minister will be coming to London.

We needed to show them that, if previous Governments might have been misled by our traditionally close and harmonious relations with countries in the area into taking them for granted, the present Government would certainly not make the same mistake."

But Article 58 of the Treaty of Paris which governs steel production is due to expire at the end of this month, and the end of this month, and unless the Council of Ministers; successfully concludes a long-term binding agreement, producers could be back to where they were six months ago.

The problem is that this area of steel production—basically high value but low volume—is almost exclusively undertaken

If Britain is to maintain its production of special steels, then a renewal of agreed import cuts must take place at the end of this month. Without this agreement then a further 2,000-3,000 jobs in the private sector could be at risk.

Consumer backing on state bonds

By Robin Young Private investors should be able to buy bonds in the nationalized industries, the National Consumer Council's representative will argue at today's National Economic De-velopment Council meeting.

In a paper prepared to co-incide with the meeting, Mr Michael Shanks the NCC chairman, suggests that the return to investors on such bonds should depend on how well the industries meet clearly specified consumer performance

For British Rail, for example, For British Rail, for example, such targets might include the total number of passengers and amount of freight carried, the mileage of track maintained, and the proportion of trains arriving on time.

Mr Shanks said yesterday:
"I believe offering bonds in the industries could transform them. People would only invest if they believed they would get reasonable dividends.

"Linking these dividends to the achievement of consumer performance standards would be a real incentive to hold down prices while raising quality of goods and services." As another innovation, Mr Shanks suggests the nationalized industries should be able to lease capital equipment over shorter terms. "This would shorter terms. This would save the expense of heavy capital investment, and avoid the pitfalls of long-term leasing which places the industries virtually in the hands of their sole suppliers, to pay whatever extertionate demands are

Mr Shanks said the national industries' record on prices over the last year had been that the nation's business heart over the last year had been appalling, and gross capital inAdmission is £2 payable at vestment had slumped in recent

Issues at stake in pilotage laws has never entered London before but the ship remains

From Mr J D Godden

Sir, We have now read three recent letters to your newspaper, from Sir David Scott (May 21), Mr Peter Howells (May 26) and Mr Ian Hay (May 29), about the proposed new pilotage bye-laws for the London District. The Government investigative committee of SCOP and ACOP came to the conclusion that the old 1913 Pilotage Act was out of date in of safely navigating a danger-ous and busy waterway is patently ridiculous.

Pilotage Act was out of date in Pilotage Act was out of date in present pilotage conditions. Contrary to Mr Hay's impression, pilots in general have very little lobbying power, there being only 1,400 in the whole of the United Kingdom. It is ludicrous and unproductive to blame pilots for the changes in the law.

Most of the controversy hinges on the so-called exempt " ships. Under the a foreign 1913 Pilotage Act, a foreign ship below a certain tonnage trading into a United Kingdom port can be adjudged exempt from pilotage after 60 days of regular voyages with a pilot. This seems reasonable until one realizes that the 1913 Act stipulates that the ship becomes exempt, not the ship's master. Thus the regular master may exempt. The implication that an inanimate object is capable patently ridiculous.

All parliamentary parties agreed in the Standing Committee that this should be altered under the 1979 Merchant Shipping, Act to the master of the ship being granted a pilotage certificate after sufficient experience in a pilotage district. We are an EEC nation and such certificates may only be granted to EEC masters. Sir David Scott, Mr Howells and Mr Hay would Mr Howells and Mr Hay would at first sight appear to be making similar crinicisms of this system but for different reasons. Sir David Scott makes a valid point concerning his sand and gravel industry. Mr Howells had an ample opportunity through the General Council of British Shipping during the formation of the 1979 Act to state his case and apparently to state his case and apparently did not take it. Mr Hay has been "caught" by registering the greater proportion of his fleet under flags of conveni-

dealing with him in Geneva the hare and hunt with the

The Pilotage Commission and the Secretary of State must decide the issues under the terms of the 1979 Act. Should they decide that the old 1913 Act must remain in force then much of the work done towards the issuing of pilotage certifi-cates must be abandoned. The result will be that greater numbers of pilots will have to be employed. Our support for the provisions of the 1979 Act, with fewer pilots in the future, completely refutes Mr Hay's accu-sation of our engineering a highly-paid job for life. Inci-dentally, in the whole of Europe only the Portuguese pilots are lower paid than those in the Yours faithfully, J. D. GODDEN,

Taxing US social security

From Mr Herbert J. West Sir, With reference to Mr Denis Parker's letter in The Times (May 21) on United Kingdom tax on pensions from abroad, I would like to draw your attention to what is in my opinion by far the worst feature of the British tax system as applied to those British residents whose pensions are derived from the United States. This is the tax on social security, which Is tax free in the United States. Social security there is actually an annuity, the capital element of which is paid by contributions by both employee and employer and originally the social security payments on. retirement were actuarial, based. entirely on the capital element plus accrued interest, although this has been modified in recent years because of the impact of

To have to pay 30 per cent of only the interest portion to the British Government is bad enough but the present system levies in addition a tax of 30 per cent on the capital element, surely an unjustifiable and confiscatory procedure. It is the only example, as far as I am aware, of an annuity on which the capital element is taxed.

As a result of these injunities

As a result of these iniquities taxes for one returning from the United States to live here could run seven to ten times as high as his taxes in the United States and his cost of living would increase 10 to 20 per cent. As Mr Parker points out, even from Canada, many who would like to return are unable to do so, and those who committed themselves to live here before the tax changes came into effect in 1974 re heavily penalized.
Yours sincerely,
HERBERT J. WEST,

Lord Cromwell's relative

From Mr Terry Philpot

Sir, Philip Robinson is wrong in his Business Diary profile (May 26) to artempt to draw an. analogy between Lord Cromwell's qualities and those pos-sessed by his distant relative, Sir Stafford Cripps, for one small but important reason. It was not Sir Stafford who was known as the "Iron Chancel. lor", as Mr Robinson states. May 26.

Philip Snowden, an earlier resident of 11 Downing Street, coveted the title because he rather liked comparison be-tween himself and an iron chancellor of a different sort-Bismark. Yours faithfully

Trading profit fell from £107m to £55m principally as a result of the economic recession.

Exceptional costs and provisions for rationalisation charged against trading profit for the year totalled £23m (1980: £12m).

At the beginning of the year, industrial action by printers and journalists caused significant disruption in publishing and in parts of the packaging activities. It is estimated that the resulting loss of production and cancellation of issues reduced profit by £12m.

Paper-making in the UK suffered from a fall in demand, high energy costs and the strength of sterling. Rationalisation continued with exceptional costs of £11m charged against trading profit. However, the Canadian and Dutch paper mills performed well....

Packaging both in the UK and Holland produced good results given the severity of the recession.

The publishing businesses continued to expand both in the UK and USA. Newspapers achieved good results.

In Decorative Products, UK and US wallcoverings together with UK textiles lost £24m after charging £11m for rationalisation. Crown Paints, Polycell and the Canadian operations together made a trading profit of £10m.

Building Products maintained a sound position despite fierce competition in ceramic sanitaryware in Holland.

Capital expenditure totalled £64m during the year (1980: £55m). During the year the carton printing company J Dring Limited was acquired for £6m and acquisitions in the publishing area totalled £11m. Since the year-end, agreement has been reached, subject to consent under the Fair Trading Act, for the Company to acquire from News International Limited the entire issued share capital of The Berrow's Organisation Limited. The minority interest in Reed Inc (formerly Reed Paper) in Canada was acquired for £14m.

Review of Assets

Last year the Board announced their intention to revalue properties and review the investment in Goodwill. The result of these adjustments has increased the balance sheet value of Fixed Assets by £85m and reduced Goodwill by £100m. The net deficit of £15m is reported as an Extraordinary Item.

The balance of Goodwill at the date of the review related to the Group's publishing interests.

Net debt increased during the year from £115m to £141m. The increase was accounted for by expenditure on acquisitions (£17m) and on the purchase of the minority interests in Canada (£14m). Loan capital was reduced from £216m to £186m with £11m of the reduction caused by exchange rate movements.

The debt/equity ratio at the end of the year was 32%. In the absence of the revaluation, the ratio would have been 40% (1980: 34%).

Taxation

Capital allowances and stock relief on lower UK profits resulted in a tax recovery but £5m of Advance Corporation Tax has been written-off as not recoverable in one year, giving net UK tax of £1m.

Brought forward tax losses in Canada have been largely utilised and overseas taxation has been provided at an average rate of 30% (1980: 19%).

The effective rate of tax on consolidated pre-tax profit is 22% compared with 24% last year.

Dividends ·

The Board has decided to recommend a final dividend of 9p per share. Together with the interim of 4p already paid, the proposed final dividend will make a total of 13p for the year the same as paid last year.

Subject to approval at the Annual General Meeting, which will be held on 28 July 1981, the final dividend will be paid on 11 August 1981 to Shareholders on the register on 3 July 1981.

Reed ready to bounce back

With the underlying problems in United Kingdom newsprint and the wall-covering operations badly hit by the recession, Reed's profits have virtually halved from £99.9m to £50.4m pretax. Within this, the final quarter, which bore more than half the £23m exceptional closure costs, produced only £8.3m pretax compared with £19.9m in the same period a year ago.

The final quarter, though, is no guide to Reed's prospects. For although there may be little recovery from the depressed demand levels of 1980-81 in recession-hit areas such as packaging, which was 15 per cent lower in volume and over two fifths down in trading profit at £21m, profits should still bounce back sharply. Reed is fairly confident that it has fully provided for closures and restructuring in its two main problem areas and, assuming there is not another £12m worth of strikes in publishing and packaging activities, profits could be back around £85m to give a fullytaxed p/e ratio of about 7 at 258p while the yield on the maintained dividend is 7.2 per cent. Reed's £23m of exceptional costs were roughly split between United Kingdom paper, which tumbled from £6.7m trading profit to £15.1m of losses, and the decorative products side. The problems here are more acute for after stripping out £11m for rationalization, the domestic textiles and wall-coverings, together with United States wall-coverings, still lost £13m and the divisional loss was only held at £14.1m thanks to £10m of trading profit from paints and other areas. Reed has closed its major United Kingdom wall-coverings factory and made 2,500 redundancies here although it will probably be a while before trading losses are eliminated.

Elsewhere. Reed's stronger areas could turn in similar profits in 1981-82, although newspapers may be pushed to match last year's performance, when profits rose from £7m to £12.1m, given the tabloid war now

The balance sheet remains solid with net borrowings about one third of shareholders' funds and although there is no current cost cover for the dividend, this should be rectified this year. So given the prospects and the likelihood of further recovery in 1982-83, Reed's shares still look cheap against the market.

Anglo-American

to come

· After last year's high gold price it is hardly surprising that Anglo American should have almost doubled pretax profits to R612m (£297m). The growth of investment income essentially Anglo's holdings in gold mines from R321m to R566m tells the story. Against a trading income which totalled R761m, up by more than R300m, there were the costs of exploration, significantly R10m higher at R25.6m, and interest charges which almost doubled to R99.8m. As usual, judicious employment of the South African Government's capital expenditure allow-ances kept taxation static at R25.6m.

This is all straight forward, and what shareholders want to hear. But the new: equity accounting system makes interpretation of attributable results harder. The new line in the accounts is share of retained profit of associated companies, which at R337m is rather more than the 1979 restated equivalent of R220m. The main company to be consolidated is Amcoal, but the retained profits of associates is in fact put into undistributable reserves. bottom line is retained profit of R616m against R364m.

A final dividend of 75 cents gives 110 cents for the year, an increase of 57 per cent. - Excluding-retained earnings, the earnings per share are 234 cents, and including retentions they are 383 cents. In each case the dividend is well covered. But the market was disappointed, and marked the shares down by 11p to 701p, possibly anticipating less exhilarating results this year.

Debenhams

Exploiting the

Debenhams' dismal interim figures when pretax profits were down from £4.7m to £1.3m have been transformed into sparkling finals which show a rise from £15.8m to £25m. The shares had been discounting this. kind of news for some time but the results were finally far enough ahead of expectations to push them up a further 8p to 109 where-they yield 8.3 per cent on the main-tained dividend. With the fully-taxed p/e ratio now over 12, the question must be whether this is to prove another false dawn for long suffering shareholders.

The key to this performance has been Debenhams' full-bloodied pursuit of sales which has pushed up department store volumes by 19 per cent, a pace which is apparently being maintained. Under normal circumstances this kind of intense price competition would have hammered the margins but the company has been able to exploit recessionary pressures on desperately destocking suppliers to cut costs in line with

It has proved—and is still proving—a potent formula out it represents a heavy marketing commitment by the company. It has swung the burden of profit making heavily into the second half and the Christmas period, and it will tend to cramp Debenhams' ability to exploit to the full any retail upturn when it comes.

As ever, therefore, the problem is one of Debenhams' management capability relative to the competition and it will take several ears of consistent results to dispel the doubts in that area arising from the record. But, for the time being, the shares look as though they may be expecting too much, though the worst of the risks have been reduced by last year's reorganization. Together with a property revaluation throwing up a £71m surplus, this has transformed the balance sheet to cut gearing from 28 per cent to 18 per cent.

 De La Rue's banknote and cheque print-ing operations demonstrated their customary resilience to recession last year, but some its ancillary divisions were not so

In particular, Crosfield Electronics subsidiary specializing in printing technology was doubly hit by recession and the fact that its main competitor, a Siemens offshoot, was able to gain a considerable price advantage as a result of the weakness of the Deutsche Crosfield's trading profits slumped £6.1m to £500,000 and were a major factor behind a overall profit drop of £3.5m to £33m. Although the setback was a disappointment, in marking De La Rue's shares 30p higher at 760p the market was clearly prepared to view this outcome as a hiccup rather than any fundamental reversal of the group's strong growth record.

At this level a yield of 3.9 per cent, and a ple ratio of around 18 on a fully-taxed basis, is a fair indication of the market's faith in De La Rue's long-term attractions. Whether this view will be vindicated by a sharp recovery in the current year depends to a great extent on whether initial enthu-siasm for Crosfield's new range of colour scanners turns into hard orders. If so, overall profits could recover to close to £40m, while any further wedkening of sterling would be an added bonus. Currency movements last time are estimated to have cut profits by around £3m last year;

Nothing arouses so much suspicion as success. This must irritate Mr Dennis Poll, still described as a licensed dealer in securities, can claim that in two years it has dealt with more equity issues (by number) than any one else in the City. Tring has left the competition behind in breeding fledglings into first the twilight Rule 163(2) market, and then into the unlisted securities market. which only opened last November.

Progress has been as profitable as it has been swift, even though Tring has called on its 650 shareholders (35 institutions hold three quarters of the shares) three times for money. Last year pretax profits went from £36,000 to £516,000 (against not less than £475,000 indicated with November's £2.5m cash call) but the reward for shareholders is their ringside seat in new issue allocations. Anyone who held 1,000 shares in Tring at the time of the reorganization of September 1979 could have paid £2,786 for new issues which on May I had a market value of roughly £4,780.

Now Tring is in talks to go public itself. Critics carp that it is in a hurry. At one stage it was launching three new issues in five weeks. Does it fear an imminent market slide? How can a small team (on average nine last year and only 15 now) have infallibly selected companies with stamine as well as the ability to sprint?

Almost by definition Tring's newcomers have little in the way of a track record.
Only recession will show how resilient they are, and that will be when shareholders in.

Irish economy—an uphill struggle for the next government

Despite the trauma of the H-block hunger strike and the heightened tension in Northern heightened tension in Northern Ireland economic issues have remained to the fore in the Irish Republic's general election to be held on June 11. If the opinion polls are anything to go by, the southern electorate is showing a remarkable detachment in the face of the passion being aroused north of the border.

The polls have consistently shown that for an overwhelming majority the economy is the chief issue in the election. In the two latest polls, published in the past week by the Irish Times and the Dublin Magill magazine, only 13 to 14 per cent said that the North was the main issue (before the H-blocks crisis it was 5 per cent). It is little wonder economy looms so large in this election. The Republic has been election. The Republic has been languishing in recession since early 1980. Unemployment is above 11 per cent and inflation is running at 21 per cent.

The central bank predicts that the balance of payments deficit will exceed £1r1,300m (about £1,000m sterling) this year, equal to 13 per cent of the gross national product.

Despite desperate efforts to pump prime the economy (and to help pave the way for an election victory) the Fianna Fail government of Mr Charles Fail government of Mr Charles Haughey is enjoying little return in terms of employment or growth. So far the economy has refused to budge out of recession. After a dip in national income last year the ceutral bank is forecasting a rise in real gnp of no more than 11 per cent in 1981.

The main opposition parties—the centre right Fine Gael party and the Labour Party—are running neck and neck with Fianna Fail in the latest polls. They are capitalizing on the government's economic record, but are hampered by a lack of credibility in the public eye.

Both parties are running

Both parties are running independent campaigns, unlike the case in the last two elec-tions when they presented a combined coalition package. Fine Gael, the dominant part-ner, insists that it can achieve virtually nobody

havin; made what he promises will be one keynore speech on Northern Ireland, Dr. Garret FitzGerald, Fine Gael's leader, has plunged enthusiastically into the economic issues of this election (his doctorate is in economics). He unveiled a 72-page election programme at the outset of the campaign two weeks ago.

Meeks ago.

In essence it bears many resemblances to the 1979 Tory election platform in the United Kingdom. A cut in the basic rate of income tax from 35 per cent to 25 per cent is the key promise. This is to be financed by a once-off increase in indirect taxes (estimated by Fine Gael taxes (estimated by Fine Gael to add 31 per cent to the con-sumer price index) and public expenditure curbs.

The party expects to make most headway in curbing public spending through a tough line on public sector wage claims and, certainly, there is a lot of fat available for trimming in a majority government on its the Republic's booming public sector pay bill. Last year the central government's wage bill rose by 35 per cent. The Republic's police (Gardai) recently rejected a pay package that would have given the average policeman on the beat 11r10,000 a year. The party has also included some highly publicized trimmings in its package, such as a fir1,000 tax credit for those living in rented accommodation, a fir500 payment for stay-at-home wives and an array of inducements for farmers.

But, in spite of the baubles, Fine Gael is promising the restoration of fiscal stability in a country which has seen an alarming growth in public borrowing. This year the central government borrowing require-ment is expected to exceed 17 per cent of gnp, compared with an already high level of 14.7 per cent in 1980. Fine Gael has promised to eliminate over a four-year period the govern-record, plus a few election sweeteners of its own, such as a frf4,000 grant and mortgage subsidy scheme for first-time house buyers and a price sub-sidy package estimated to cost an annual Ir 100m.

But that record poses problems. Already in his 17-month term of office Mr Haughey has presided over an economic policy U-turn of startling dimensions. Within weeks of his accession to the premiership be warned the Irishin a presidential-style television broadcast, of the need for austerity.

"As a community we are living way beyond our means... We had to borrow in 1979 over Irf1,000m. That amount is equal to one seventh of our entire national output for the year.
That is just far too high a rate and cannot possibly continue"
he said. But in the summer of 1980

Mr. Haughey underwent a conversion. Seizing on some favoursole economic statistics he declared that the economy was not with the Irish Times.

The government would take a responsible course of maintaining employment to counter the international recession. This has remained the tenor of government economic pronouncements ever since.

Meanwhile, public spending has been allowed to rise again. In 1981 the Exchequer's borner. rowing requirement will exceed 1,700mPt, according to a forecast last month by the Dublin-based Economic and Social Re-

A return to the high growth rate of the latter half of the seventies is well beyond the horizon for Ireland. Any hopes of an upturn based on a recovery in the depressed agricultural sector or an improvement in overseas markets for industrial exports must be clouded in overseas markets for industrial exports must be clouded by the prospect that any Irish government will be faced with the need for corrective economic action. Inevirably, there will be a deflationary bias in Irish fiscal policies for the next two to three years.

Such a prospect is not so daunting as it would be in a large, more self-contained economy such as Britain, according to the arguments of the Republic's increasingly vociferous professional economists. As ous professional economists. As Ireland is a small, open, economy (external trade account for three-quarters of total demand) the effectiveness of pump priming by the government is lost through a worsening balance of payments deficit. Conversely, it is argued, right curbs on public expenditure should cut the deficit without too hazardous an effect on the growth rate. In recent weeks the Irish economic problem has worsened, of anything, through the latest upsurge in the value of the dollar. The trend in the balance of payments deficit and inflation have been aggravated. ous professional economists. As and inflation have been aggravated. Barring a stroke of luck like the discovery of a big offshore offsield—a modest-sized one is not enough any more—whoever wins the election next week is facing an uphill struggle.

Edging towards a new system of monetary control work drafting the Green Paper on monetary reform—but at least the Bank of England, which has a prime role in for-mulating and implementing changes, has come rather more out of its shell recently and adopted a more positive and constructive attitude.

What, then, is the aim of change? Chiefly, it is to produce a system which is both produce a system which is only easier for the authorities to monitor and also enables them to act more swiftly and more effectively to influence devis-tions from the chosen monetary path.

The keystone in this process The keystone in this process is to be a move to a structure that rests on what might be called the base cash in the system—that is, notes and coin in circulation (about 85 per cent of the "monetary base"), plus the commercial banks cash balances at the Bank of England. England.

notes and coin in circulation). This second argument rests on the assumption that com-mercial banks work in such a way that the relationship between their total deposits and their cash balances at the central bank will tend to be stable. (If it were not to be, then there are those who would argue for a mandatory ratio to impose the necessary stability.)

This is a debate that is still hotly contested and at this stage there is no government com-mitment to move quickly, if atall, to any formal attempt to control the monetary base. The only commitment so far is to push the concept of cash back: to the centre of the stage in place of a reserve asser ap-proach which has roled less than perfectly since the system was last tampered with in the early seventies. More precisely, the present aim is to abolish reserve asset system before Parliament goes into recess to-wards the end of July.

From this move three devel-opments will flow. First, all banks and licensed deposit taking institutions above a certain size will have to hold a non-interest bearing deposit at the Bank of England equivalent to a per cent of their eligible liabilities—essentially their sterling deposits. (A new clusively since last November— number of players. Moreover, statistical series to include all through daily dealings in the total £3,600m of funds that those falling into the new per deligible bills between the may take several more months.

Bank and the discount houses, sustain the eligible bill market to prepare.)

Also, the clearing banks will continue to run non-interest bearing operational deposits at the Bank as part of their clearing function. The authorities will be particularly interested to see how big these prove to be, both from the viewpoint of their own money market opera-tions, but also because they will be counting on obtaining roughly the same amount of interest-free money from the new arrangements overall as they get from the 14 per cent cash ratio at present required of the clearing banks alone.

Secondly, a natural concomitant of the abolition of the reserve asset system will be new prudential liquidity requirements for the banks. The authorities' original proposals in this area have effectively heen consigned to the shredder. What we seem likely to finish up with is a liquidity norm for various types of banking opera-tion which will provide a basis for negotiation with individual banks according to their struc-

Now that the Bank has expressed a preference for meet these changes, however, coning the cbbs and flows of money between the private sector and the Exchequer by bill dealing, rather than temporary lending, it is clearly important that the bill market is large enough, adequately financed and efficient enough for these operations to be carried out without There are two essential facets hero. One is the proposed broad-eping of eligibility status to bills "accepted" by overseas banks operating in the United Kingdom. The Bank is to consider applications to join the club from overseas banks of sufficient stature and bill market expertise, provided, too, that those banks come from countries which offer equivalent (though not necessarily identical) privileges to those of United Kingdom banks.

The second faret is the posi-

The second facet is the posi-tion of the clearing banks. Clearing banks have never been particularly large holders or acceptors of bills. Some clear-ing bankers believe that they are now being asked to under-write a system designed for the convenience of the Bank of England and the discount

They dislike the idea of having to continue to provide what they see as cheap money for the discount houses and would have preferred the Bank to have developed its open market operations in the inter-bank market instead.

The counter-argument is that the broadening of participation in the eligible bill game will mean that the provision of finance to the discount houses will be spread among a larger

Bank and the discount houses, the latter acting as a buffer between the Bank and the commercial banks. (Eligible bills the discount houses to meet their reserve asset require-cerns the implications for interest rate behaviour. The Bank has made it clear that it wants to adopt a more flexible and marker-oriented approach to interest rates in future. This will be made possible by the switch in the emphasis of open market operations to bill dealing at variable interest rates, rather than short-term lending at a fixed discount rate (minimum lending rate).

Theoretically, that means that the politicians could press for the phasing out of the politically sensitive MLR if they wished. But whether the Bank really wants to be stripped of a visible discount rate for back-stop lending is less certain.

More important, it remains to be seen how the Bank proposes to operate the unpublished interest rate band on which it will base its market dealings. It would represent a radical departure in official United Kingdom thinking were the Bank to permit the volatility in short term interest rates that the Federal Reserva has allowed Meanwhile, the authorities

Business Diary: Daly's World service • Béer money

Ed Daly likes to be known as . America's Freddie Laker, but the comparison does not stand up in anything other than Daly's business life as head and owner of the Californian airline World

While Laker advertisements which do not feature the good Sir Freddie's beaming visage are as rare as reliable luggage trolleys at Heathrow, the 58-year-old Daly guards a lifestyle seemingly based on that of his fellow Irish-American John Wayne with a secrecy worthy of Greta Garbo.

Sir Peter said that the merger with Rolls-Royce was the first step in re-establishing its business post-nationalization. The other major event last year was the sale of International Machines Division of Roneo Vickers at a final price of about £19m compared with the original estimate of up to £25m.

The management and workforce now control some 20 per cent of the equity and the 80 per cent balance was put for-ward by the consortium of investors led by Guidehouse Ltd and Citicorp Development Capital.

Details of the trust to allow the workforce to own 5 per cent of the company have yet to be decided, but shares will be sold to employees at about a £1—compared with the estimated £10 a share paid by the directors, who hold 15 per cent, and the consortium

The bid, put to the receivers in March, is the result of a long search around City institutions to find backing at a time when the toy industry was distinctly unfashionable.

"By one half of the City we were considered cancerous and by the other leprous", said Mr Mueller. He said that Hornby's profitable track record and the management's determination that the group should stay British finally proved successful. Interest had been shown by overseas buyers, particularly from Kadar, the Hongkong toy group, he said.

Terms of its current issue are one new share for every three already held at 375p. In the stock market, the shares remained unchanged at 420p. The group says the money is needed because the business of its principal subsidiary, The English Association Trust, has continued to expand, the merchant bank services are being more widely used and the rate of de-posits has been greater than

Mr Christopher Spence, a director of the group, said: "Four years ago when we bought control this company had nothing. The first rights issue last year brought share capital and reserves to around f3m. In a business our size one has got to have sufficient capital to allow one to operate comfortably. Edbro plunges into red

Collapse in the British and European heavy truck market and losses on exports due to the strong pound sent Edbro (Holdings), which makes tip-ping gear for trucks, deep into loss during the year to March

It plunged from a £1.24m pretax profit in 1979-80, itself a decline from 13m, to losses of 13.9m lest year. There is no dividend for the year, as fore-cast at the interim stage, when the group had already lost f1.34m. The shares fell 40 to 39p yesterday. Mr Geoffrey Buckley, manag-ing director, said yesterday that after the group's cost-reduction programme, losses would be sharply reduced this year, but he was not prepared to forecast break-even point yet. "I think we're off the danger list, but we will need a lot of nursing,"

he said.

After trading losses of £2.05m where in 1979-80 it made £2.46m Edbro had to pay £1.84m in interest, against £1.22m. Borrowings and losses peaked in December, when net debt was £9.4m. Debt elimination is Edbro's main aim, and after falling to £6.7m at the year-end net debt is now £5.8m.

Stocks hav been cut from fil.3m to f8.5m at March 31, and are still falling, Edbro was left with high stocks as demand for tipping gear collapsed here. United Kingdom sales fell £7.5m to £11.7m, out of a total drop in group sales of £12.1m to £23.4m. Demand for heavy trucks has fallen 40 per cent in Britain and is showing a similar fall in Europe. Edbro has pulled out of selling tipping gear to the North American truck market but has put up its

Harrisons down £7m

Harrisons & rossield, the plantations, trading, building materials and chemicals group, saw its 1980 pretax profits fall by £7m to £51.1m. The final dividend is maintained at 29.3p gross giving 40p gross for the gross, giving 40p gross for the year, the same as in 1979.

All of the company's main divisions showed a decline in operating profits. Plantations, in which the biggest consti-tuent is the 80 per cent owned Harrisons Malaysian Estates, contributed some £500,000 less at £29m. The lower prices for paim oil and cocoa which pre-vailed for most of last year were chiefly to blame.

The chemical and industrial divisions, in which the most important part is Harrisons' specialized chemicals interests in Britain and the United States, urned in £7.41m against £8.61m. Despite heavy recent investment in this sector, notably in chrome chemicals, the group is

CONSOLIDATED INCOME STATEMENT

In respect of the 1981 financial year the Corporation has adopted the equity method of accounting for investments in associated companies. For this purpose an associated company is one in which the Corporation holds, as a long term investment, from 20 per cent to 50 per cent of the equity capital. Retained profits of associated companies are transferred to non-distributable reserve. The 1980 figures have been restated.

Operating Profit E.Am (1979 22.0m).

Destocking by consumers, which caused a serious fall in demand, coupled with the strength of sterling and high energy costs, largely account for the fall in the earnings. The run-down of stocks in the last quarter was of particularly severe proportions. Major construction and commissioning of new plant were undertaken by British Chrome & Chemicals and rapid progress was made by American Chrome & Chemicals in changing the process used for extracting chrome from ore.

Operating Profit £9.3m (1979 £11.1m).

U.K. housing starts, already low in 1979, fell by a further 31% to the lowest post-war level. This, coupled with sizeable disposals by some importers at highly competitive prices to deplete their stocks, affected margins in the latter part of the year and thus contributed.

Carless slumps to £3m but raises dividend

Oil exploration and solvents group Carless, Capel & Leonard saw pretax profits more than halved to f3.1m in the year to March 31, from £6.9m in

However, artributable profits were 40 per cent higher for 1980-81 thanks to a £1.7m profit on the sale of Carless's stake in Strata Oil, and a £264,000 tax credit, against a tax charge of £2.3m the year before.

That meant the dividend could still be raised, and at 3.93p gross it is 10 per cent higher for the year. But the shares fell 2p to 136p yesterday.

Dundonian may sell its funeral interests

Dundonian, the group whose shareholders' perks include a free cremation, is talking seriously with potential buyers about selling off its crematorium, funeral parlours and graveyards.

That part of Dundonian's activities, which comes under its financial services arm, contributed £230,000 to group pretax profits last year. But Mr Max Lewinsohn, chairman, says that the growth potential would just not keep up with the expectations he has for property, mining and personal finance.

Motor dealers win appeal against prison sentences

Their Lordships allowed appeals by Thomas Hartley, aged 41, and his son, Thomas Hartley, aged 41, and his son, Thomas Hartley, aged 19, of Cleveleys, Lancashire, who each received concurrent sentences of nine months imprisonment at Inner London Crown Court (Judge Evans) last April on their pleas of guilty to 11 counts of obtaining property by deception. The father's sentence was reduced to four months and the son's to three months both suspended for two years.

approval certificate for the model. Once the model had been so approved a secondary, numbered type approval certificate was required in respect of each imported car.

The deception practised by the appellants was that the Mercedes suspended for two years.

Regina v Hartley
Regina v Hartley

Before Lord Lane, Lord Chief Justice, Mr Justice Boreha and Mr Justice Stocker

Motor dealers appealed successfully against immediate prison sentences passed when they pleaded guilty to feaul by Motor dealers appealed succossfully against immediate prison sentences passed when they pleaded guilty to fraud by selling at a discount foreign cars which they imported but could not be registered or licersed for use in England in the absence of numbered type approval certified. According to men to the succession of the succession was about £1,500 for each car.

Succinct plea

Mr. W. N. Denison, QC lassigned by the Registrar of Criminal Appeals) for the appellants, and that the prosecution had conceded that the prosecution had conceded that the essence of each offence was the sale of a motor car without a numbered type approval certificial. Under the Road Traffic All, 1972, as amended such an offence was triable only summarily and the maximem penalty was a time of 1200. The case was the first of the Thela Act, 1968.

The judgment

The Judgment

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE said that the appellants traded as Thomas Hartley (Junior) Ltd in Blackpool.

The Motor Vehicles (Type Approval) (Great Britain) Regulations, 1979, IS I 1979 No 1092] required certain formalities before a foreign car could be licensed to travel on roads in England. The first requirement was the Minister of Transport's approval certificate for the model. Once the model had been so approved a secondary, num-

The Land Charges Act., 1972. The action was therefore registrable as a pending land action under section 5 of the Land Charges Act., 1972, and the court refused an application by the company that cautions registered in respect of the leashed by properties in the Land Registry in favour of the landlord should be vacated.

Mr Martin Pascoe for the plaintiff company; Mr William Elland for the landlord should be vacated.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR said the two properties in question were houses devised by separate leases and each had been assigned to the plaintiff company. Some months earlier, the defendant company, the landlord had served on the assignor notices under section 16 of the Law of Property of Reptiles, 1938, the promistic of the Leashed from the landlord from taking any proceedings, by action or otherwise, for the enforcement of eny right of reentry or forfeiture for breach of repairing covenants in the leases.

vacation of the cautions. The writ also claimed damages. It was accepted that there had been breaches of the repairing covenants and the only question between the parties was whether the landlord's application to the county court was or was not a "pending land action" and so a "pending action" within sections 5 and 17(1) of the Land Charges Act, 1972.

The term "pending land action" had been discussed in recent cases, among them Heywood v BDC Properties Ltd (No. 2) (1964) I WLR 267) and Calgary and Edmonton Land Co Ltd v Dobinson (1974) Ch 102). In the Heywood cave, the application for vacation of a registration failed because neither party was making any claim to land against the other; the plaintiffs there were only seeking a declaration that there

But we've got him driving a wheelchair.

Colin Lewis was born with spastic diplegia and congenital hydrocephalus. He'd spent thirty-six years flat on his back when he came to us. We felt we could help him. After two carefully considered operations, today he can not only sit up; he can drive himself about in a power-driven wheelchair.

We have over 27th severely disabled and incurable patients to cure for. We cannot cure them. But we can help them. Skilled care can minimise their disabilities as much as possible, and can help them lead as full a life aspossible. But we, too, need help. We are not part of the Health Service and we rely a lot on the generosity of the compassionate. YOU CANHELP us with a donation, a deed of covenant or bequest.

Troat

Terry Jones who tonight takes over the presenter's job from Robert Kee in Paperbacks (BBC 1, 11.00)

 WESTMINSTER MAN (ITV, 9.00), a pot-pourri of categorized thoughts from back-bench MPs of yesterday and today, offers only crumbs of comfort to back-benchers of tomorrow. There's no only crumbs of comfort to back-benchers of tomorrow. There's no sense of nobility in the calling, no feeling that what they do in the House can sway the destiny of the nation: a complete absence of idealism. ("Like an old folks' home, with people sitting around hoping for something to happen... Question Time is a monumental sham, good only for the tourist trade... most back-benchers are wasting their time... sick of talking tripe during election time... family life strained to breaking point ... a lion in the constituency. a mouse in the House ... a verse.

in the constituency, a mouse in the House average professional life of only 11 years so many MPs are also lawyers that the most important party, isn't Tory or Labour but the Lawyers' Self-Preservation Society ... ") And there's the depressing reminder that the MP who twice lost his seat is now a labour in a color will be reminded.

labourer in a steel mill. This anatomy of the nation's political lemmings has been brilliantly edited by Robert Oliver.

SO YOU THINK YOU CAN DRIVE? (BBC 1, 8.10) comes hard on the heels of the second showing of that hortific Man Alive programme on road deaths, and the two are inextricably linked. But what tonight's film does is to define the ways in which the road user, pedestrian and motorist alike, can stay Man Alive and not end up Man Killed. It is surely all to the good that the format it has chosen to ram home its safety-first lessons is the roundary. it has chosen to ram home its safety-first lessons is the popular quiz in which we, the viewers, can pit what wits we have been careful enough to retain against the wits of the competing teams

This is Derby Day, and you need to be a dedicated sporting type to have no doubts that three-and-a-quarter hours on ITV (starting at 1.30) and two hours on radio (Radio 2, 2.00 pm) is not too much time to devote to some horses racing across a stretch of only one-and-a-half-miles. With its team of experts, ITV is taking it all very seriously. But the fact that Larraine Chase, the cockney comedienne, will interview the personalities on Epsom Downs leads us to infer that the radio coverage will be far more pragmatic in approach.

Two worthwhile repeats on Radio 4 today: Peter Terson's play RATTLING THE RAILINGS, (3.02) about an impossible old widower (Timothy Bateson), which stars Elizabeth Proud, adapter of the current Sunday night serial Cold Comfort Farm, and portrayer of the book's author Stella Gibbons, and Trevor Hill's pre-Ena Sharples portrait of Violet Carson in A PITY SUCCESS HAS COME SO LATE IN LIFE (7.45).

From Charles Hargrove, Paris, June 2

The new Socialist Government anyounced today that nuclear tests in the Pacific would be resumed—four days after it had made at known that they would be suspended. The official explanation is that between Friday and today, M Charles Hernu, the Defence Minister, has had the opportunity to study the test programme and consult President Mitterrand.

The Government was forced into announcing the suspension marine force, and the ractical into announcing the suspension of the tests after press leaks that transport aircraft loaded with equipment for the Pacific Test Centre on Mururoa Atoll had not left France on schedule. There has been similar confusion over the construction of the Plogoff nuclear power station. It is still not clear whether it will be halted or frozen temporarily until Parliament can be consulted over the whole nuclear power There has been similar con-

The hesitations of the Socialists on the nuclear tests issue is strongly reminiscent of those of President Giscard d'Estaing when he first took office seven years ago. He dismissed M Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber, a confirmed opponent of nuclear tests and the new Minister for Reforms. 11 days after his appointment, because he had publicly criticized the Government's deci-sion to resume them. But the President then ordered one of the tests scheduled for June.

1974, to be cancelled, and announced that testing would from 1975 onwards take place underground, instead of in the atmosphere, to take into account the protests of the New Zealand Government and French ecologists.

The decision taken seven years ago to switch to underground testing was unpopular with both the scientists and the marine force, and the tactical missile Hermes as well as the medium range missiles which will be fitted to the Mirage IV. aircraft.

The previous government had

The previous government had also scheduled a number of tests in the Pacific this year in connexion with research on the French neutron bomb, about which M Hermu had expressed strong reservations before the election. He maintained it implied a dangerous drift in French nuclear strategy, and the acceptance of the principle that a forward nuclear battle. the acceptance of the principle that a forward nuclear battle was possible. He had also indicated that this question would need to be re-examined. M Giscard's d'Estaing's Government had not taken a final decision about the development of a neutron bomb.

The misgivings of the experts, combined with the Gaullist and Giscardian opposition probably explain today's tion, probably explain today's decision. The Defence Ministry has not said when the tests will be resumed.

If it satisfies the experts and the military, the decision to resume testing antagonizes the ecologists. M Brice Lalonds, their candidate for the presi-dency, expressed surprise over it,

In a statement issued today, he said the aunouncement with out any explanation gives the impression that the Government has not only given way to the pressure of the Army, but also displayed incoherence and secrecy. The ecologists want explanations. They strongly hope the Government underhope the Government under-takes not to test the neutron bomb, to make the Pacific a nuclear-free zone, and to work for disarmament.

The Plogoff case is still un-clear, M Pierre Joxe, Minister. for Industry, refused at a press conference today to go back on it. He emphasized that the Government would not impose nuclear power on Frenchmen, and would abide by the decision of the newly-elected parliament, which would be called upon to decide on the role of nuclear power in French energy produc-

The SDP candidate will have to go before local Liberal officials in Warrington and seek their support for the election campaign must make Although the speed with choice."

Liberal Party leaders will which the two parties have today urge their constituency officials in Warrington not to will help the Social Democratic contest the forthcoming Parliamentary by election and instead to back a Social Democratic candidate.

The election pact was hammered out by leading figures in both parties at Westminster yesterday and it leaves the SDP in the clear to try to win the right to field their own can-didate in the next by election it must reduce the chances of Mr Jenkins or Mrs Williams finding a suitably winable seat in the forthcoming months.

Dr David Owen, MP for Plymouth Devonport last night delved into Welsh political history in an attempt to win over to the SDP the support of the principality's, up to now, reluctant voters. A recent region by region breakdown of the SDP's national membership showed less than 1,500 came from Wales, but Dr Owen reminded his Cardiff audience that twice before the Welsh had changed the political map of Britain.

After initiating 30 years of Lloyd George Liberalism the "native radicalism in the in the Welsh" had given the Labour Party its essential

Dr Owen also said yesterday that the top names in the party must decide for themselves if they want to contest the vacant Warrington seat (our Cardiff Correspondent writes).

Referring to Mr Roy Jenkins and Mrs Shirley Williams, he said: "I understand the wish for them to stand. Everybody must make their own personal
